● Pat Cutini and I have dissolved partnership in the Galleries and under the ownership and management of myself and Mrs. Brinkman we hope to again bring you things on these pages we offered as we did at Marble Hall. Best of luck to Pat in his new venture and may we always be the best of friends as we are today.—A. L. Brinkman.

● These humble photographs can never do full justice to our advertised offerings, but justice surely is in the low prices we ask and in the pride you obtain in their ownership.

● Is my face red and did I make a mistake when I bought 100 pair of Button Earrings at $3.00 a pair. They looked beautiful, all nicely individually boxed on cotton batten, etc. Nicely made from real old attractive buttons and jewels. But the ladies just didn't gobble them up in their colors so I am stuck; so I am going to try and stick someone else on the 85 pair I have left, but I am so scared that I'll take $75.00 for them and produce the receipt if necessary for the $300.00 I paid, helps on income tax.

TEARDROP PULL

Remember That we were the ONLY concern that made regular deliveries of furniture trim and accessories all during the trying war years. This was due, in part, to the fact of owning the major portion of the old Sack, Inc. pre-war stock. Now that conditions are somewhat easing up we are far better able to serve your needs in this field.

Our fully illustrated catalogues are NOW AVAILABLE to all antique dealers, decorators, architects and builders who will receive a copy Free of Charge provided that a request is made upon business stationery. A 50c charge will otherwise be made. This is pre-payable in either postage stamps or coin.

CHIPPENDALE PULL

Due to the constantly fluctuating cost of raw materials we are unable, at this time, to establish a standard price list. However, we are adhering strictly to our policy of being governed by the old Sack, Inc. pre-war price list. Information regarding the prices of our catalogue items will be promptly forwarded.

The Old and New

Christmas, 1946

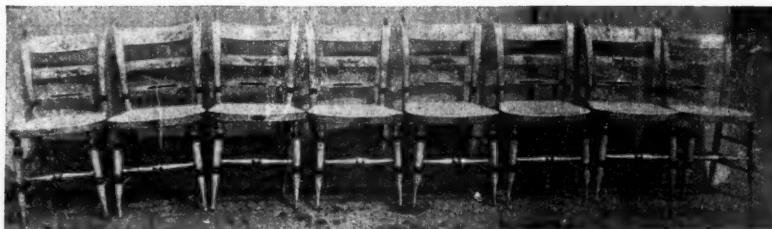

As we assembled the material for this issue we found ourselves collecting some memories related to the old and the new. We visualized many of the homes of our readers, homes of our old friends and homes of our newest subscribers. We could not help but think of the common bond that has drawn this group together, of the happiness, and heartsease, that has come to so many as a result of their hobbies, of the friendships that have been formed, of the personal development that each must have experienced with his or her hobby.

Our introspective mood also traveled back to those late months in 1930, when we were in midst of a gigantic, financial depression. It was just about this time that we were assembling material for our first issue which was launched in March, 1931. It was a season of faith, but of course, not entirely without misgivings. How would our subscribers, a list of collectors assembled from various purchased publications accept the new child! Since Christmas is sentimentality itself, we may be forgiven for taking time out to reflect on the pleasant culmination of this memory.

And when the mellow mood of Christmas descends upon you, it is then we should like to ask your forbearance. If our replies to your letters are delayed slightly, it is unintentional—just an avalanche that we got buried under. Or if we have been remiss in some other fashion, may the kindness of the Christmas season wash out the memory. We need not tell you that times are far from normal, and while we have the capacity for real work here at HOBBIES, the days are much too short where HOBBIES and hobbies are concerned. All too soon they become just a memory.

COVER

The front cover of this issue is representative of the Season, for pictured here are Christmas and related lights from the collection of J. F. Madsen, California. Mr. Madsen is right proud of his collection of more than 300 specimens of Christmas, float wick and candle burning lights. Included are night lights, Fairy lamps, Fairy pyramid lights, and nursery lamps. The Christmas lights include 14 different colors in the Thousand Eye pattern, 12 in Diamond Point, 14 in blown Hobnail, 15 in Diamond Quilted and many more in other patterns. Some of the colors are red, honey amber, red amber, olive amber, dark amber, brown, light blue, medium blue, cobalt, smoky blue, peacock blue, turquoise, clear, opalescent, clamwater, emerald green, blue green, canary and cranberry. There are opaque colors of turquoise, powder blue, pink, mauve, milk white and chartreuse.

The collection includes all types of glass and most methods of making, such as overlay, Tiffany, Satin, blown and pressed.

Mr. Madsen has found that some types are very elusive as are some of the colors, but this only adds to his interest in collecting.

Lincolnia in Washington

A news item in the New York Sun states that Abraham Lincoln is apparently the victim of what is known as the Washington mind.

It seems that a District of Columbia resident, for sentimental historical reasons, wished to secure a picture of the Civil War president to hang in his office. Thirty art shops and galleries in Washington, by actual count, were visited, but in each one the answer was the same:

"No, we do not have one in stock as we do not have many calls for pictures of Lincoln."

Pedestrian Hobby

Anna Mae Stibbe, Indiana, a collector of souvenir shoes, has more than 500 specimens, many of them from foreign countries. They say "it's an ill wind that blows nobody good," and so the last war brought some good things to collector Stibbe. Many of the shoes in her collection were given to her by friends who were stationed in foreign countries and many islands during the World War II conflict.

War Memorabilia

"When Mark Twain wrote this 'War Prayer,' 30 years ago, he said, 'It can be published after I am dead, for only dead men can tell the truth in this world and I have told the whole truth in that prayer.' Here it is:

'O Lord our God, help us to tear their soldiers to bloody shreds with our shells; help us to cover their smiling fields with the pale forms of their patriot dead; help us to lay waste their humble homes with a hurricane of fire; help us to wring the hearts of their unoffending widows with unavailing grief; help us to turn them out roofless with their little children to wander unfriended through wastes of their desolated land in rags and hunger and thirst, sport of the sun's flames of summer and the icy winds of winter, broken in spirit, worn with travail, imploring Thee for the refuge of the grave and denied it—for our sakes, who adore Thee, Lord, blast their hopes, blight their lives, protract their bitter pilgrimage, make heavy their steps, water their way with their tears, stain the white snow with the blood of their wounded feet! We ask of One who is the spirit of love and who is the ever-faithful refuge and friend of all that are sore beset, and seek His aid with humble and contrite hearts. Grant our prayer, O Lord, and Thine shall be the praise and honor and glory, now and ever. Amen.'—N. Y. World-Telegram

Chicago Fire Exhibit

The Chicago Historical Society recently opened two new exhibits commemorating the 75th anniversary of the Great Chicago Fire, October 8-10, 1871. One exhibit tells the story of Chicago's worst catastrophe by means of contemporary posters, prints, photographs and mementos; the other lets the newspapers which were published during and immediately after the conflagration provide their own day-by-day account.

In one of the Society's main floor rooms the visitor is attracted by the heavy black type of proclamations bearing the signature of Mayor R. B. Mason. One, dated October 9, 1871, while the fire was still raging, recites that "In the Providence of God, to whose will we humbly submit, a terrible calamity has befallen our city," calling on citizens to help preserve order, and pledge relief to the sufferers. Beside it are several original telegrams from General Phil Sheridan ordering troops and supplies sent to the stricken city.

On the walls are vividly colored prints, by Currier and Ives and other famous print-makers, showing Chicago before, during, and after the fire. In the fire scenes flames seem to brush the skies, while on the ground panic stricken crowds jam streets and bridges. Photographs, more realistic than prints, provide a grim record of the ruins.

Many objects in cases testify to the terrific heat of the fire. At one extreme are tiny china dolls, spools of thread, ginger cookies, knives, spoons, glassware—all kinds of household articles still identifiable, though fused into strange shapes by the heat to which they were subjected. At the other extreme is a huge mass of metal, shaped like a meteorite, taken from the ruins of the Miller Bros. & Keep wholesale hardware and cutlery store at State and Randolph Streets. This ponderous relic, weighing thousands of pounds, may be seen at the Clark Street entrance to the Society.

ALBERT B. GARGANIGO

The exhibit of Chicago Fire newspapers, arranged in cooperation with the Chicago Veterans Press Association, includes extras issued as early as the second day of the fire. Since all newspaper plants of the city were in the burned district, the first issues were printed as handbills in small shops west of the Chicago River.

Although the news photograph was years in the future in 1871, the papers which used illustrations succeeded in getting woodcuts and lithographs of fire scenes into their issues within ten days. The London Illustrated News had fire pictures within two weeks.

In addition to newspapers, the exhibit includes dozens of books and pamphlets on the fire, all published in 1871 and 1872.

Besides the exhibits at its own building, the Chicago Historical Society will have an exhibit at the Fire Prevention Show in the Commonwealth Edison Building. The Society is also publishing a commemorative volume, "The Great Chicago Fire," made up of letters written during and immediately after the catastrophe by a number of Chicagoans who experienced its horrors.

State Memorial

Under the administration of the Ohio State Archaeological and Historical Society, the estate of Thomas Worthington near Chillicothe has been made a state memorial.

The Worthington estate has a 32-room mansion, barns, several buildings, a greenhouse, and 330 acres. It includes the Adena culture site explored in 1901.

The mansion was built in 1803, and is one of the few houses in the state remaining that is associated with the early days of Ohio.

Oceanarium

Coney Island is to have a museum at the Boardwalk, between Fifth and Eighth Streets. There will be five large exhibit halls, rooms for special exhibits, where tropical fishes, electric eels, fresh water fish, and commercial food fish, will be shown. There will be pools and gardens surrounding the buildings.

Church to be Shrine

Bishop Henry Althoff of southern Illinois is planning an organization that will sponsor the renovation and preservation of the 147-year-old log church of Holy Family parish and the 100-year-old-colonial-type rectory. The church and grounds will become a shrine when the bishop's plans are completed.

Historic Sites' Trees

Historic Sites' trees in New York State are getting special attention from state officials so that they may be preserved as long as possible. Professors from the State College of Forestry at Syracuse are going over trees for insects and fungi. Sites being inspected are Philipse Manor, Tarrytown; Washington's Headquarters of Gen. Knox near Newburgh; Clinton House, Poughkeepsie, and Senate House in Kingston.

Club Camps at Famed Site

Historic Rock Creek, northwest of Kankakee, Ill., was the scene recently of camp for hundreds of Four-H camp members from Northern and Central Illinois.

The camp site is the location of the old Pottawotomie Indian reservation and the grave of Sha-wa-na-see, one of the most famous of the Pottawotomie chieftains, who died in 1832.

More About the Bettini Cylinders

Through the kindness of my friend E. B. Burke of Hempstead, N. Y., I am able to reprint in its entirety the following article which appeared originally in the May 18, 1899 issue of Leslie's Weekly.

Regarding my notes (HOBBIES of July 1946) on the only Bettini cylinders ever found by a modern record collector, Mr. William H. Seltsam (International Record Collector's Club, Bridgeport, Conn.), who has done considerable research on the subject, writes that he does not believe Bettini's records were on sale commercially but that they were available on special order only. That is to say, if you saw a record listed in one of Bettini's catalogs you could not simply go to a record store and buy it; you probably had to send your order to Bettini who, for a price sometimes as high as $5, would make you an individual copy of the desired record. But this is a minor point; we are still waiting impatiently for a cylinder by one of the many really great singers who recorded for Bettini.

—Leslie's Weekly, May 18, 1899
The Most Interesting

Studio in New York

The above is a bold characterization, yet we do not hesitate to apply it to the artistic and wonder-haunted atelier of Lieutenant Gianni Bettini, on the top floor of the Judge building. Bettini, a modern magician, who can call up spirits from across the vasty deep, and even from the realm of shades. The world's greatest singers and actors are his familiar guests and never-failing entertainers. Their faces peer out from hundreds of pictures on the wall, and their living voices may be summoned in an instant from the compartments of a cabinet, labeled with their names, on the opposite side of the room. It is a unique collection of echoes.

In other words, this is the laboratory and headquarters for the Bettini micro-phonograph, which is primarily a development of the Edison phonograph principle—attachable also to the various "phones" on the market—peculiarly adapted to the reproduction of the female singing voice, without the harsh and squeaky tone ordinarily imparted to it by machine-records. Lieutenant Bettini's invention has endeared him to the musical and dramatic artists. They have fairly flocked to his studio, and, delighted with the experiments constantly going on there, have contributed their best efforts, with a spirit and enthusiasm that does not always animate their works on the stage. Most of them have left, in the form of autograph letters or inscribed portraits, testimonials of their satisfaction with the invention and personal regard for the inventor—for Lieutenant Bettini is himself an accomplished musician, a master of the foils, a conversationalist in several languages, and generally sympatico.

To name all the distinguished people of whom such interesting souvenirs are treasured in this Fifth Avenue studio would be simply to give a list of nearly all the principal actors, actresses, opera and concert singers known to the public during the past decade.

"Here is Madame Sarah Bernhardt," says the young master of the place, indicating one of his famed pictures with pardonable pride, "photographed in this room, and in the act of listening to her voice from one of my machines. It was on the occasion of her last visit to New York, two years ago. Like most of the really great artists who come here, she was simple and unaffected, and no one could have suspected her identity—until she began to declaim. Then she was superb, for she very rightly took it as a serious matter, this putting her voice on record for posterity."

"Duse—her distinguished rival, and your own compatriot?"

"Yes, here is her photograph—this sad, Madonna-eyed face—and she will talk to us from one of those cylinders yonder. Duse proved a most charming subject, when once her reserve was broken through. She said she liked her voice, hearing it for the first time in this reproduction. You know, artists on the stage have no idea how their voices really sound to others. Réjane was like a child with a toy—you see what she has written here: 'Ah, it's admirable! I can't get over it. Thanks!' Yvette Guilbert's record might serve as a lesson in articulation and the nuances of the French language—it is exquisitely clear and musical. Ellen Terry's would be the same in declaiming Shakespeare's English, only she interrupted herself constantly with laughing side remarks, and the record I have is—well, delightfully fragmentary. Melba paid us a visit only a short time ago. She had sung Aida the night before, and so didn't feel like vocalizing; but she spent an hour or two listening to the de Reszkés and other operatic stars, whom she applauded most generously.

"Poor Nicolini!" continued the inventor, taking out a cylinder which he handled with a kind of reverence, as if standing at the tomb of the late husband of Adelina Patti. "He will never sing any more, except through this."

Immediately adjoining were the names of Nat Goodwin, John Drew, Henry Dixey, and other comedians, suggesting good things in the laughable line.

"I have a fund of anecdote here, beside which Frank R. Stockton's 'Story-teller's Pack' isn't a circumstance. Sometimes the boys get confidential, and tell things to the machine that make them laugh at their own jokes. One popular actor got off a yarn at expense of a certain Western town, and it passed into circulation. They heard of it, and the next time he played there he had to make an ample-sized apology before his audiences warmed to him as of yore."

"But these records are very fragile things in their material form," remarked a visitor, who had let fall one of the blank cylinders of paraffine, which broke like an egg-shell.

"Yes" they would be quite perishable property, and my business of supplying phonographic records would be impossible, if I could not make duplicates. One day, four or five years ago, an assistant let fall a box of cylinders covered with new records, and a dozen or more of my finest voices were silenced in an instant.

A Studio That Many Famous Persons Have Visited.

"They were all broke up," and so was I. That discouraging mishap set me to work anew, and I have now perfected a method by which I can duplicate a record from itself and make any number of reproductions."

No matter how long the visit to this studio may last, nor how often it may be repeated, one leaves reluctantly, with a feeling that the half has not yet been told. It is reassuring, as a well-known musical critic remarked, to know that so many perfect examples of the pure Italian singing are stored away for posterity, now that the bel canto is in danger of dying out. "If Wagner and Richard Strauss are going to hold the fort, then Bettini's records should be worth about a million dollars apiece, fifty years hence!"

ADA JONES VII

By ULYSSES (JIM) WALSH

For perhaps a dozen years after Ada Jones first sang into a recording horn, her popularity remained near its peak. It survived the death of her associate, Len Spencer, whose vogue had largely passed by the time he suffered his fatal heart attack in December, 1914. She continued to make many solo records and to be in demand for duet work with Billy Murray and other male singers.

After 1917, however, her phonograph activity declined considerably. Most probably, this was because the nation was engaged in World War I, and the type of war song that dominated the popular music field was not well suited to Miss Jones' style. Arthur Collins and Byron G. Harlan, who specialized in blackface comedy work, lost their Victor and Columbia contracts for a similar reason—unsuitability of material and style to the changing themes of the time.

From 1918 on, Miss Jones did little solo work, and appeared only occasionally in the Victor and Columbia lists. In the former, for instance, she was represented by a duet with Billy Murray, "I'll Take You Back to Italy," in the spring of 1918, but did not reappear on a Victor record until the fall of 1919 when she assisted Cal Stewart in "Uncle Josh and Aunt Nancy Put Up the Kitchen Stove."

She recorded oftener for Edison and some of the smaller companies, but even Edison largely ceased to assign her to duets with Billy Murray. From 1917, he sang much oftener with his veteran partner. After Billy returned to free-lancing in 1919, at the expiration of his joint Victor-Edison contract, he and Miss Rice also sang together for Victor, Aeolian-Vocalion and some minor manufacturers.

Perhaps a factor in Miss Jones' appearing less often on records was her increasing activity as a concert singer. She traveled in 1918 with a troupe consisting, besides herself, of George L. Thompson, the comedian, and the original Shannon Four quartet, whose members then were Charles Hart, first tenor; Harvey Hindermeyer, second tenor; Elliott Shaw, baritone, and Wilfred Glenn, bass. Her personal appearances with Cal Stewart, in the "Pumpkin Center" specialties, probably came a little later.

During this period, incidentally, the demand from buyers of Edison cylinder records for Blue Amberol versions of descriptive specialties that Ada Jones and Len Spencer had recorded on wax Amberol records ten years or so before was so great that several were reissued. In addition, Ada and Steve Porter made Diamond Discs of several of the original Jones-Spencer skits.

We are now approaching the end of Ada Jones' career and of her life. Late in 1921, she made her last records. For Edison she sang with Billy Jones, in the absence of Billy Murray who had signed an exclusive Victor contract the year before a double-faced record of "On a Little Side Street" and "When Francis Dances With Me"—two of the best numbers she ever did, in which her voice and style were unimpaired. About the same time she sang the "Francis" song for Victor, with Billy Murray as her partner. It was issued a month or so after the Edison version and was probably the last recording she ever did.

Then Miss Jones took to the road, as the head of a small concert company. The other members were "Armstrong, the Magician," a boyish-looking young fellow with a mustache, who seems to have been her business manager; Mabel Loomis, soprano and pianist, and Beth Hamilton, violinist. The two young ladies sang and played a higher type of music than their more famous star.

Since Ada Jones' following was always greatest and most enthusiastic in the smaller communities, that was chiefly the sort of place in which the troupe appeared. In February, 1922, for instance, it gave a performance in the little town of Marion, Virginia, where I then lived, and I was fortunate enough to be among those present in the Court Square Theater on what seemed to me a historic night. I was not a particularly observant boy, but I had a feeling that Ada Jones, although she sang as well as she ever had, was very tired, and I felt depressed as I left the theater.

Less than three months later, she died in Rocky Mount, N. C., after collapsing at the end of her recital in a theater there. It was difficult, after I decided to write this series, to obtain accurate information about the singer's final illness. A letter to the Billboard merely brought the suggestion that I consult the New York Public Library for information. The Library replied its record showed only that Ada Jones died May 2, 1922.

I wrote to the New York Times, and received this reply: "We are sorry that we can find no record in our files of Ada Jones (Mrs. Hugh Flaherty). The New York Times apparently carried no notice of her death nor does our morgue contain any file on her career." To me it appears strange that the nation's greatest newspaper should have completely overlooked the death of one of the most popular singers of her time.

Variety sent me a copy of its notice in the issue of May 5, 1922. It said briefly: "Ada Jones, heading her own road company under the management of O. E. Wee, died suddenly May 2 from uremia in Rocky Mount, N. C. The musical comedy star gave a performance Saturday night and was removed to a local hospital immediately after, where little chance for her recovery was looked for from the start. Following the death of Miss Jones the company, which included several musical features, was brought back to New York to be disbanded. Her remains will be taken to Huntington, L. I., for burial."

It seems rather unusual that Variety should have referred to Ada Jones as a musical comedy star, which she was not, and not have mentioned her phonograph career. The sketch was remarkable, too, for lack of any information concerning her age, surviving relatives and biographical data generally.

Determined to get more detailed information, I wrote to the Rocky Mount Evening Telegram, asking for a copy of the news story it must have carried about Ada's death, but received a reply from Miss Maud A. Battle, acting managing editor, that the 1922 file had not been preserved. She added:

"I checked with the Rocky Mount Sanitarium. They, likewise, have record trouble, for the hospital was run by the Catholic church at that time and when the Sisters left they took their records with them. However, I was told that Ada Jones was a patient of Dr. D. L. Knowles at that time, and you might get some additional information by writing to him."

Thanks to Miss Battle's suggestion, I wrote to Dr. Knowles and received a reply that was as courteous and comprehensive as he could make it. He wrote:

"I remember very well the short illness and death of Miss Ada Jones, but I do not recall any special incidents. What information I have for you I got from the death certificate. All records at the hospital have been lost or misplaced.

"I was called to see Miss Jones, early morning of May 1, 1922. She was at the Ricks Hotel and was traveling with her manager and a maid. When I saw her that morning she was practically unconscious. I had her moved to the hospital where she died next morning at 10:20. She never came out of her coma and delirium. Her blood pressure was extremely high and her kidneys were shot. I signed her death certificate, 'acute uremia due to nephritis and hypertension.' Her body was shipped to New York City and burial was supposed to have been May 5, 1922.

"The informant was W. J. Armstrong, traveling with Miss Jones as her manager (I think that is correct). He did not know so much about her past and did not know who her father and mother were—so here goes the certificate:

"Ada Jones Flaherty, age 40, phonograph and concert singer. Born in England, no date; father and mother, don't know, and don't know birthplace.

"Duration of illness, May 1-2, 1922. Died 10:20 a. m., May 2, 1922. No autopsy.

"Diagnosis: Acute uremia and nephritis. R. R. Gay, mortician, Rocky Mount, N. C. Body shipped to New York. Informant: W. J. Armstrong, no address. Husband's name given as Huly Flaherty.

"This is all I can give you and I hope you will find some use for it in your unique and interesting hobby. If I can help you further, call on me," was the way Dr. Knowles concluded his most appreciated letter. "Huly" as Mr. Flaherty's first name, of course, was a misunderstanding of Hughey, his correct given name.

Still Going Strong After 70 Years

Closely allied with print collecting is the collecting of the old soda and cigarette cards, many of which excelled in their art work. It is interesting to note that some of the firms that pioneered in distributing the later are still going strong. A recent release states that after more than 70 years in circulation, the lithographed "Useful Birds of America" cards distributed free of charge by Church and Dwight Co., Inc., makers of Arm & Hammer and Cow Brand Baking Soda, remain in demand.

For those who have a collection of these cards this bit of history may serve a useful purpose. It was in 1865 that John Dwight produced in the kitchen of his South Hadley, Mass., home the first baking soda manufactured on the North American continent. In 1847, his brother-in-law, Dr. Austin Church, joined him as a partner, and they opened their first factory in New York City, and they used the name of John Dwight & Co.

Dr. Church retired in 1865, but the business bug in his system began gnawing at him within a year and with two sons as associates they formed the firm of Church & Sons and set themselves up as rivals of John Dwight Co. It seems that one of the sons had owned the Vulcan Spice Mills, which had the arm and hammer trade-mark. This was adopted by the new firm, and it remains today as one of the best known trade-marks of the country.

Anders Zorn

The Lakeside Press, Chicago, recently displayed representative examples of the prints of Anders Zorn in its exhibition halls. In calling attention to its exhibit, the Lakeside Press acknowledged two of the outstanding collections of Anders Zorn in the country—The Chicago Art Institute's collection and the one in the National Museum, Stockholm, Sweden. The Art Institute collection received as its nucleus the Wallace L. DeWolf collection, which was augmented through the bequest of the Charles Deering collection and further gifts from time to time by Mr. and Mrs. Chauncey McCormick.

As American as the hot dog is this scene from N. Currier. It is one of a series of four of the well known and popular American Farm Scenes, which were produced in 1853. One of the dealers listed this set at $1,000, and that was before the inflationary trend.

The Lakeside Press exhibition recalled some of the highlights of the career of this talented Swedish artist.

"When Anders Zorn was a small boy he entertained the peasants of his native village in Sweden with drawings and with little images he carved out of wood with his pocket-knife. The first work of art he ever sold was the statuette of an enraged cow, for which one of the country people paid him 'a sou and a small white loaf.'

"In the minds of these Swedish peasants the only test of art was a simple one: How truly does the picture or image show the subject which the artist has tried to depict? Just this, and nothing more. Throughout his life this requirement evidently remained a chief guide-rule for Zorn, and it doubtless goes far to account for the almost universal appeal of his work. His drawings need no explanation. Their meaning is simple and direct. Hence, an exhibition of Zorn etchings, like a 'pop' symphony concert, is something that anyone can understand and enjoy.

"The present exhibition is a selection of 120 etchings and eleven original pencil sketches, which include the best of Zorn and show the artist from all his various sides. Among them are such favorites as The Waltz, Omnibus, Reading, Vallkulla, The Swan, Vicke, Madonna, Billy Mason, and The New Ballad; and two extremely rare pieces—Tired Model and The Storm."

Galleries Architecturally Re-designed

Sixty drawings by famous artists were shown recently in the print galleries of the Art Institute of Chicago. Much care was devoted to re-designing the galleries so that sunlight would not reach an invaluable drawing in black ink by Vincent Van Gogh, "Tree in a Meadow," which has already started to fade. Another by the same artist, "Cypress Trees," while in a former owner's hands had been exposed to daylight so that today it is a pale brown in color.

THE FAMOUS BOSTOCK COLLECTION

By A. MORTON SMITH

One of the most celebrated circusiana collections in this country is owned by Claude W. Bostock, radio and motion picture writer, who has refused $30,000 offered by museums for the rare pieces which are exhibited in his Beverly Hills, Calif., home.

The collection is unique in that it is made up principally of articles associated with the shows produced by Mr. Bostock's family for four generations in Great Britain and the United States during the past 140 years.

Mr. Bostock's ancestors had the rare foresight to carefully preserve handbills of their earliest ventures in the outdoor amusement field, and these have been handed down from one generation to another and meticulously preserved.

Why Mr. Bostock is capable of exhibiting several hundred items having to do with the activities of his family in show business is quite obvious when the family history is reviewed.

George Wombwell established one of the first traveling menageries ever seen in England back in 1805, and at one time he had three such shows traveling in Great Britain. A bachelor, he left the enterprises to two nieces, one of whom was Emma Wombwell, wife of James Bostock, manager and advance agent.

Claude Bostock is a grandson of this pioneer couple in the circus business of Great Britain, his father being James W. Bostock, one of three brothers who became famous as circus and carnival operators in their native land.

On the death of James Bostock, Sr., his son, James W. became manager of Bostock and Wombwell's and later purchased Edmunds late Wombwell's Shows which he eventually sold to his brother, E. H. Bostock, who combined the two attractions, still being operated by the family.

The third brother was Frank C. Bostock, the animal king, who came to the United States in 1892 to introduce carnivals and street fairs to this country, and who was the author of the popular book to be found in most circusiana collections entitled, "The Training of Wild Animals," (D. Appleton-Century Company.)

While Claude Bostock was first brought to America in 1892 as a child, he has made his home permanently in this country since 1898. From 1907 to 1934 he lived in New York, migrating to the West Coast and Hollywood in 1939.

His great uncle, George Wombwell, founder of the family shows, saved some of the handbills and other items relating to his business, which were left to Claude Bostock's grandmother. To this collection were added posters, handbills and heralds of the Bostock and Wombwell enterprises during James W. Bostock's career as manager and these were passed along to the present owner when his mother died.

Mr. Bostock, in turn, plans to leave the collection to his daughter, Phyllis Baine, and grandson, Alistair Baine, of Auckland, New Zealand.

A rag paper handbill of the Wombwell menagerie, printed in 1816 is the oldest item in the collection, and Mr. Bostock believes it is the first handbill ever used by a traveling menagerie, describing a porcupine as one of the show's features.

A poster of the season of 1847 for the Wombwell menagerie, is also believed by its owner to be a "first," being printed in red and blue ink from wood blocks. This bill, which features the first woman lion trainer in England, is thought to be the first two color printing ever done for show advertising purposes.

A handbill of the Edmunds late Wombwell show, printed in 1852 and illustrating a yak and a gnu, is one of three copies known to exist, one being in the New York library, another in the Harleian collection in the British museum, and the third in Mr. Bostock's possession.

In addition to printed matter, the collector displays in a glass case medals given the family by Queen Victoria during her 1897 jubilee, and photographs of the Bostocks taken with the queen.

He has the tusk of a female elephant that was in the London Zoo at the same time as the famous Jumbo in the 70's. A mounted claw from the original Wallace, the untameable lion, obtained by one of Mr. Bostock's ancestors in 1830 is among his prized possessions and he has other mounted lion claws, worn as watch charms

DOLL-OLOGY

COLLECTING FOREIGN DOLLS

By MRS. JOSEPH FALTIS

My hobby of doll collecting started before the war. I began with a Navajo doll from New Mexico and have added dolls from various racial groups and from several countries. However, since the war started I have enjoyed a new phase of my hobby. I have eleven active correspondents in several countries in Europe and in Africa with whom I exchange information about their lands and peoples for information about our country. In addition, I have made an arrangement to send them merchandise in return for native dolls. It is an excellent way to contribute food, old clothes and other basic necessities to the valiant, hungry people of Europe.

Not long ago I sent a package to Finland for a young lady who wrote the following in English to me:

"On the 24 of July, I sent the packet of dolls to you. I hope you will like them. I beg nothing for them, but I am very glad if I shall get old clothes and food. I send to you a little dyed bilberry which we get here in Finland in the summer for our only 'vitamin.' I have no shoes because you cannot buy them. Our family is happy to be with each other but two wars have made us and our whole country very poor."

This Finnish girl sent several thoroughly charming dolls, one of which is the most whimsical looking fellow I have ever seen. It is six inches high, its body is of pale lavender sateen stuffed with sisal. His hair is of a deeper lavender sisal, parted in the center and curved out from his part and back under in a page boy fashion. He has a startled and whimsical look in his oil-painted eyes, his nose is a round lavender ball sewed just above his oval-shaped mouth. His satin shirt is a rich forest green above his very brief peasant trimmed pants. He has very large feet encased in hand-woven cloth of palest tan and green. He looks like a very pixilated pixie from out of dream land.

From Tanganyika, I receive delightful letters and interesting dolls from a Mohammedan girl who is the daughter of a wealthy merchant whose headquarters are in Dar es Salaam. She does not wish to have food or old clothing but rather desires to have pink American stationery and picture post cards of the United States. She had a very unique reason for not answering my letter promptly in September. She wrote as follows:

"We people of Dar es Salaam were very busy as it was the Diamond Jubilee of our Spiritual Lord His Highness The Aga Khan. On this occasion, many people had come to Dar from India, Syria, Egypt, South Africa, Madagascar and whole of East Africa. Altogether there were about thirty thousand Ismailis, excluding the non-Ismailis and other distinguished guests. Here we had camps constructed for the accommodation of all the guests, and everything about their food, etc., had been arranged for before hand. They used to get free food every time. It was like a whole new village. A special theater was built and all sorts of crafts were on display. I was acting as an Indian queen in a program.

The actual weighing ceremony of His Highness The Aga Khan took place in the afternoon of August 10 and history was made on the African continent. The scene of this great ceremony was unforgettable, not only from the brilliance of the spectacle associated with the weighing ceremony but the spiritual devotion underlying this great occasion, made possible by the inspired leadership of the Aga Khan and the generous response of his thousands of followers, for the Khan tipped the scale at 243 pounds, and money represented by the diamonds was £350,000 which the Aga Khan Le'ion presented to the Khan as an unconditional gift.

... the Begum (Her Highness the Aga Khan) wore a glorious white silk sari which reflected the sun's rays as they fell on the many hundreds of diamonds clipped to the sari in the form of stars."

This Mohammedan girl has sent me a Mohammedan doll, several African native dolls and an Indian doll which portrays the Indian woman wearing the sari like Her Highness the Aga Khan, without the diamonds.

From Holland, I received a boy and a girl doll who stand some fifteen inches high in their hand-carved wooden shoes. My friend in Holland writes in French or in English and is a charming man of middle age who had two sons of military age in this last war. He has told me of how it was necessary to hide one son under the boards of his dining room to keep the Germans from finding him. The plan was successful. Also, the man himself was conscripted to labor for the Germans.

This man has a deep and lasting gratitude for the liberation of his country by the Americans. He has said that we Americans cannot conceive of how dear liberty is because we have never lost it as have the Dutch and others. He feels that he can never thank Americans enough for the liberation of his country. At his request, I have sent soap, food, clothes, etc., to him and his family.

Dolls from the Collection of Lillian Locke

THE WAY IT STARTED

By LILLIAN LOCKE

When little Terese West played with her tiny doll in its tiny cradle so long ago, little did she know that she was starting a doll collection for her granddaughter, for this was long ago when doll collections were not so common as they are today.

Terese was my grandmother and was born in Louisville, Ky., in 1809. she was quite a small child when someone gave her a very small doll in a very small cradle. She must have prized it highly, for it was still in very fair shape when given to my mother.

It now belongs to me and was the nucleus of my present collection of dolls, now numbering 58, and which is a source of much pleasure to me. My mother told me that at one time the doll emitted squawks when punched in its tummy; so it could no doubt be classified as one of the earliest "crying" dolls.

The little cradle has figures painted on the head, sides and foot and is lined with a faded checked material like the coverlet, which covers the doll which has never been removed from its bed.

Due to my interest in this old doll, I started to collect, eventually specializing in modern dolls.

The modern dolls of today change so rapidly, following the demand of the public for whatever is the fad of the moment, that they are soon gone from the market and soon a collector's item. Among these are the first Shirley Temple dolls.

Among the dolls in my collection are Shirley Temple, Sonja Henie, Charley McCarthy, Fannie Brice, Snow White, Seven Dwarfs, Pop Eye, Olive Oil, the Dionne Quints, a group of Chinese dolls, Japanese dolls, Indian Dolls, negro dolls, and a creeping baby.

In my collection, a football player ogles a Spanish senorita, an English sailor grins at two rag dolls, Elsie the Borden cow doll stands with her golf bag ready for a game of golf. A French doll stares through long lashes at Charley McCarthy, the Gray Lady (proud of her part in the window display during the last Red Cross drive) smiles gently at the others.

Altogether my dolls make a most amusing hobby. They attract much admiration, and I am grateful to my grandmother, Terese West, for the good care she took of my first doll.

Dolls in Business

A Chicago collector displays his fine collection of Bisque in his restaurant where the patrons may feast on beauty as well as good food. Maybe it has a psychological value in these days when good food is not so easy to get. A real estate operator in the East displays her collection of miniatures and cups and saucers in her sales office. Another real estate man has a collection of mustache cups displayed in special shelves in his office.

Mrs. Rose Bracher a New Jersey beauty parlor operator, displays her doll collection in her shop. And she has been known to trade a permanent wave for a doll.

Mrs. Bracher's collection gets a little different treatment than do dolls of most collectors. She designs special coiffures for each doll and often has their curls and pompadours permanented when they need it for a certain period. Of course, when any of the dolls need new wigs that is also where Mrs. Bracher shines. She makes them from real hair.

Mrs. Bracher says that the collection attracts a great deal of interest among her patrons, and so does the copy of HOBBIES Magazine which is available for ready reference in the shop's magazine file.

BECKY, MY FIRST LOVE

featuring an exquisite china doll of the romantic pioneer era of the Northwest

Travel with her in covered wagons, over Indian trails, where the early Winnebagos made their homes. Make the trip with her to grandma's in that old black buggy. Watch the sunset over the Sauk hills. Listen to the tinkling of the bells on the cattle coming down the lane — and Cousin David's wife Persis, singing Rock of Ages, her evening hymn to the baby. Watch grandma prepare the supper of potatoes, salt-pork and cream gravy, soda biscuits and maple syrup. The story of Becky and other dolls covers a period of more than 100 years, with an historical background. There are 21 beautiful illustrations. The fan mail from hundreds of delighted readers, age 8 to 80, proves its popularity. Handsomely bound in Russian red cloth, with gold lettering, it is a perfect gift book.

Early Balloonists

By D. TUDOR HARRELL

Soon after the success of Lunardi, Saturday, October 16, 1784, he brought his invention and ascended from the Royal Academy at Little Chelsea accompanied by M. Sheldon. His balloon with wings and oars, preceded by two small balloons as signals, arose at 12:10 in majestic grandeur in the presence of upward of 400,000 spectators. In 18 minutes they were lost in the air. After a number of astonishing maneuvers, the travellers made a stop at Sunbury where Sheldon unwillingly descended and Blanchard continued on alone. After passing over Guildford, Farnham, etc., he hovered a while over Portsmouth and alighted at Rumsey near Southampton, finishing, by far, the most extraordinary journey ever performed.

In January of the following year, he crossed the channel, starting from Dover and landing near Calais.

In September 1784, the Duke of Orleans, accompanied by the Montgolfiers, ascended in a new model with oars and rudder. When they had ascended 1,400 feet a terrific thunder storm came up. Great masses of inky clouds rolled by and the wind blew. When the temperature changed they began to descend rapidly. They threw their ballast overboard and shot upward into the storm clouds. Darkness enveloped them and they were horror stricken. Suddenly they shot upward through the clouds and the sun shone full upon them. They were rapidly coming to the point where their balloon would burst, so the Duke drew his sword and plunged it into the great globular receptacle. The gas began to escape and the balloon to descend. They reached the ground safely but just missed landing in a lake. This voyage lasted five hours.

On August 31, 1784, M. Durnof and his wife sailed from Calais, France. It was seven p. m. when they arose and were soon lost to view in the night. A strong wind blew them over the North Sea and when morning came the voyagers saw nothing but watery wastes below. Seeing some ships, M. Durnof attempted to descend. The waves caught his car and almost buried it. Madam Durnof fainted and her husband held her in his arms an hour before vessels came to their rescue.

La Mountain was perhaps the greatest aerial navigator in the 19th century. On July 1, 1859, together with Messrs. Wise, Hyde and Gager, he made one of the most remarkable voyages on record. They ascended from St. Louis, Mo., and landed in Jefferson county, New York, in a little less than twenty hours.

In September, 1859, La Mountain, in company with John A. Haddock, ascended from Watertown, N. Y. They rose nearly perpendicularly until they reached about 3,000 feet. There they struck a northeast current which drove them along at the rate of a mile in two minutes, rising as they went.

At 10,500 feet they were caught by another current and sped along eastward. The sun went down and they could no longer direct their course. Ascending through the clouds they saw blue sky, studded with stars above them and floated on the surface of the clouds for hours like a boat on the water. Finally they threw open the valve and descended into the darkness. At length the balloon came to rest in the top of a tall spruce tree. Securing it by a rope, they lay down to sleep. Morning dawned stormy and as far as the eye could see was nothing but tree-tops. They were in the wilderness of Upper Canada. Abandoning their balloon they set off through the woods. Starvation stared them in the face and had it not been for some frogs they found, eating head, bones and all, they would have perished.

After an adventurous journey however, they reached civilization.

But the bold La Mountain could not rest. On July 4, 1873, he made his last ascension. On this trip the ring that encircled the balloon broke in two and the balloon escaped. La Mountain descended in his useless car, landing in a field. A deep indenture was made in the earth where he fell and some of his bones were crushed to powder. His body was a mass of jelly and his jaw-bone found some distance away was covered with blood.

by his father and other famous trainers.

In the collection of printed matter are such odd items as catalogs advertising the first gas lamps used in circus tents and other early day show equipment.

While the collection relates principally to the Wombwell and Bostock show properties, Mr. Bostock has some 50 to 100 items, including handbills and posters, of competitive contemporary shows in Great Britain.

The collector has personally been interested principally in the theatre, motion pictures and radio, but he has been associated indirectly with the circus field.

As a vaudeville agent early in his career, he booked such acts as Bostock's Riding School, Mlle. Ella and her lions, Hendrickson's Tigers, and Consul the chimpanzee, while in 1932, the Bostock Wild Animal Circus and Bill Cody Wild West show, touring America, bore his name.

In addition to his circus and menagerie collection, Mr. Bostock has something like 100 framed photographs of artists he has managed, among them Fred Allen, Stan Laurel, Chic Sale, McIntyre & Heath, Trixie Friganza, Poodles Hanneford and Marceline, the clown.

And still another phase of his collection is an assortment of old joke books, including an original "Joe Miller's Jest Book."

BUTTON NOTES

By DOROTHY FOSTER BROWN

Not long ago, Mrs. J. Homer Skinner (N. Y.) wrote me about some historic buttons which she saw at the old Fort Museum, at Schoharie, N. Y. The curator showed her five matching buttons of gold (or gilt), filigree, somewhat similar in appearance to cage-type "Perfume" buttons. They were worn by Captain David Williams of Schoharie, one of the men who captured the famous Major Andre, in 1780. There is no proof, of course, that the buttons were being worn at the time of capture, but there is no proof they weren't, either!

Such buttons stimulate the imagination, for they invite unlimited speculation, and open the door to all sorts of exciting possibilities. What stories could be written about buttons from any military uniform; or about an Anchor button picked up on a beach where wrecks are washed ashore; or about a battered Police button, found in a city street, and still attached to a bit of blue cloth, as if forcibly torn off in some struggle; buttons like these are more "thrilling" to me than the most spectacular or intrinsically valuable buttons which are made "to sell." I think they appeal to all romantic or imaginative collectors.

Mrs. Skinner also visited Fort Johnson, on the Mohawk River above Amsterdam, where are displayed many buttons found on the sites of old forts. Shown also is a C.S.A. Confederate button, one of a consignment from England which was captured by a U. S. man-of-war while attempting to run the Union blockade. Other C. S. A. buttons were never captured (except by collectors!) because they were held up at Bermuda on their way to Southern ports.

The Fort Johnson mentioned above was named for Sir William Johnson (1715-74), soldier, colonist and friend of the Indians. He was connected, albeit left-handedly, with the Mohawk Chieftain, Joseph Brant (1742-1807).

D.F.B.

Brant, whose native name was Thayendanegea, was a unique and extraordinary man: a strange combination of Indian warrior and civilized statesman. He translated the Prayer Book into the Mohawk language, built the first Episcopal church in Upper Canada, and had his portrait painted by Sir Joshua Reynolds! His portrait appears also on buttons of the Brant Dragoons and on insignia of the 2nd-10th Dragoons (Hamilton, Ont.) The former button, shown herewith, is of convex brass with design in relief. Reverse: "J. H. Gaunt & Son Ltd., Montreal."

SETS OF GOOFIES

By BERYL STEWART

In the issue of HOBBIES for August, 1946, I had an article entitled "Sets of Goofies." I have received at least 150 letters about the article, showing much interest. There were long letters about sets which my correspondents own. If space permitted I should like to publish their letters with a Victorian title, such as: Examples of Pleasing Correspondence! I gleaned much from the letters. Certain corrections and additions that I can make from those letters and from my own collection seem pertinent.

Some asked why the sets were not illustrated. Since the article discussed more than 200 different designs, illustrations would have made the article into a book.

ADDENDA

The Lucky Charm Set was unlucky in the August issue, for a typographical error made it Lucy. There were inquiries about that!

The Nut Set may have a sixth button, the peanut. It may belong, but I never saw it sold with the others. It seems to be limited in colors common to the other buttons of the set.

The Races of the Eastern Hemisphere is made not only in glass and plastic, but also in china.

The Padlock and Key Sets come in two sizes.

The Set Of Snow White and the Dwarfs described in the previous article was the smaller set. I have seen a larger and much more interesting set, but I do not own the set. This set was white plastic with brightly colored trim. Are there other colors?

The china Vegetable Set previously described had six buttons representing corn, peas, carrots, beets; tomatoes, celery, and cauliflower. A collector lent me her set of eight on the original card. It had buttons representing corn, peas, carrots, beets, tomatoes, cauliflower, asparagus, and green pepper. Perhaps this is the appropriate place to argue against some collectors' insistence that a set must be six buttons, no fewer, no more.

The U. S. A. Set was also made with U., white S., and blue A. The three made a set.

There are other buttons that naturally fall into the same classification even though they were not carded together. Such buttons are the Colonial Lady and Colonial Gentleman. The Horses, Deer, and Squirrels, commonly called the Disney animals, are similar buttons. They come in many tints and shades, but they were never manufactured with trim. The Witch and the Clown are similar buttons. They were trimmed with contrasting enamels.

ADDITIONAL SETS

The Animal and Fowl Set was manufactured about 1937. It consists of six buttons: giraffe, elephant, horse, dog, duck, and goose or pelican. Some collectors call this the Zoo. Although the buttons were plentiful, the wide variety of tints and shades makes complete assembling of all sets difficult. (Two-hole.)

The glass Animal and Bird Set has six tiny glass buttons enameled white, or enameled white and trimmed with bright colors. One card I purchased had: a dog's head; a dog; an elephant; a butterfly; a bird in flight; and a bird on a limb. Another card had five buttons; the elephant, the same birds, the butterfly, plus a rooster. These were made in Czechoslovakia. (Shank.)

The Baseball Set is a scare set representing catcher, pitcher, batter, short stop, fielder, and umpire. The set is commonly called Baseball Players. But what about the umpire? The only set I have seen is white plastic with a different colored trim for each man. (Shank.)

The Cigarette Set, similar to the Pantry Shelf Set, has five buttons representing: Old Golds, Chesterfields, Lucky Strikes and Camels. (Two buttons represent Camels. "Among doctors everywhere, its' Camels two to one?") (Shank.)

The Dog Set has been re-issued in part. Thus far, I have seen the spaniel, bull dog, and Scottie in white, pink, light blue, yellow, light green, red, and royal blue. Collectors express fear that manufacturers will re-issue popular designs, and thus, devalue collections. About that I shall not prophesy. The buttons of the new dog set are in brighter tints and shades, and they have no trim. (Shank.)

A Flower Set contains an assortment of six flowers: a wild rose in orange color, a white daisy with orange center, a pink rosebud, a red tulip, a yellow zinnia(?), and a light blue flower with orange center. Some cards had a slightly different assortment. Each design was sold separately. (Shank.)

Another plastic Flower Set consists of four buttons: white pansies, light blue pansies, red and pink roses, and a bouquet or spray of white and yellow flowers. (Shank.)

A second china Fruit Set has six buttons somewhat larger than the more common set mentioned in the first article. These china buttons were made in Czechoslovakia. The set has: (1) A spray of three red cherries with green leaves; (2) an orange pineapple with brown markings; (3) a cluster of purple grapes; (4) a red strawberry with white markings; (5) a yellow pear; and (6) an orange with a green leaf on the "left-hand" side. The coloring of this set is excellent. (Shank.)

The plastic Hawaiian Set has five buttons: surf rider, hula dancer, guitar, pineapple, and Hawaiian playing a guitar. Is there a sixth, or even a seventh, design to the set? These sets came in all colors, plus gold and silver. (Shank.)

The metal Hawaiian Set has: surf rider, hula dancer, Hawaiian playing guitar, sail boat, beach or bath house, and pineapple. Perhaps there were other combinations. (Shank.)

The plastic Mexican Set includes six buttons: a Mexican on burro; a Mexican asleep beneath his sombrero; a Mexican with guitar; a burro; a Mexican with accordion; and a Mexican with a pack on his back. Since these were sold also with only three or four buttons per card, they are scarce in all six designs. The only set I have seen is white with green trim. Are there other colors in this set? (Shank.)

The Tea Set has a teapot, a tea kettle, a sugar bowl, and a cup with saucer. The buttons were made in Japan. These were frequently sold with only three of the four designs per card. (Shank.)

The glass Vanity Set is a mirrored glass set made in Czechoslovakia. The set includes: mirror; perfume atomizer; a purse of a design common in china buttons; an open fan of a design common in plastic novelties; and crossed gloves of the design used in the Lady's Travel Set. These buttons are really precious! And so very scarce! Were these sets made in plastic? (Shank.)

The metal Vanity Set has mirror, perfume atomizer, powder box, lipstick and compact, crossed brush and comb, and crossed manicure scissors and buffer. These metal buttons were made in gold and in silver finish with different applied colors to make different sets. (Shank.)

The Western Set is a metal set representing bison, covered wagon, cowboy with revolvers, gambler, Indian, and prospector with pick. Although I do not have the set, many have written about it.

The set of Whiskey Bottles has five metal bottles representing Mount Vernon Rye, Seagram's V. O. Schenley's Black Label, White Horse Scotch, and Wilson's Blended. The labels are paper pasted to the metal bottles. These sets were made in at least three finishes: silver, gold, and copper. There may be a bronze finish also. (Shank.)

The U. S. N. Set is similar to the U. S. A. Set previously described. One card has: U in red; S in white; and A in blue. The gold and silver sets were more common. (Shank.)

MORE ABOUT GOOFIES

By DOROTHY FOSTER BROWN

I note that Beryl Stewart, in her entertaining and informative article (HOBBIES, July, 1946), mildly disapproves of the term "Goofies" as applied to recent "object" buttons made of Modern Plastics, wood, china, etc. Since it was I who first gave this name to these buttons, I could not help being interested in her reaction.

It is immaterial to me what the buttons are called; but I thought, and still think, that the name "Goofy" describes them rather well. It is distinctive, if not "elegant" and is in no danger of being confused with any other button name or classification. And if, as a name, it is not particularly dignified—well, neither are the buttons!

The three Goofies shown are a sample—and they are only three out of hundreds. I hesitate to name the animal represented by No. 1. It looks slightly more like a horse than anything else, but—! Whatever it is, it is made of Modern Plastic, with a metal shank. No. 2, I call "Tyrolean Tommy." He is made of wood, painted by hand, with a metal shank, and is one of my favorite Goofies. (Note his buttons!) No. 3 shows a Turtle, in white with red trim. Turtles were among the earliest Goofies in this country, I think. They have self-shanks and are found in many solid colors and combinations.

Few of these modern buttons are beautiful, in a strict sense of the word, or even in comparison with older button types. They are clever and colorful, but they are victims of mass production which sacrifices quality to quantity. No one calls them dull or uninteresting, however! They are amusing, timely, "cute" and very attractive in their own way, even though they may not possess the loveliness that lasts. They don't need it, for they are made to be superseded. In fact, they are something like women's hats, and the word "Goofy," it seems to me, applies admirably to both!

I was much interested in Mrs. Stewart's description of the Goofy "sets," and discovered two more to add to her list: a set of packaged Cigarettes, consisting of Chesterfield, Fatima, Lucky Strike, Old Gold and Camel (all in full colors); and a set of four Birds, in colorless, transparent Plastic, with the impressed designs rendered in color. There is a Robin, Woodpecker, Parrot and Heron or Crane. They have self-shanks, and look like glass, at first sight.

I have many other odd Goofies, in twos and threes, which look as if they belonged originally to still other sets. Probably the manufacturers could give complete information about these modern button sets, if anyone took the time and the trouble to interrogate them.

A LETTER IN A BUTTON

By DOROTHY FOSTER BROWN

From Gwendolyn Lee (Connecticut), I received the following "human interest" button story, in the shape of a yellowed clipping, cut from an old scrap book. It appeared originally in the Chicago Herald.

"A most unique relic of the late (Civil) war is possessed by George Clutch of Columbia, Indiana. It is a button off a private soldier's uniform. During the latter part of the war, Mr. Clutch's brother-in-law, J.F. Gallaher, whose home is in Ohio, had the misfortune to be captured by the Confederates and confined in Libby Prison. After Mr. Gallaher had been there some time, he began to feel the need of money, which would enhance his prospect of reaching the Union lines, should he succeed in making his escape. A surgeon of his regiment, who was in the prison, was about to be exchanged. He cut off one of the large brass buttons from his uniform, and separating the two parts of it, made a cavity by taking out the filling. He (Mr. Gallaher) wrote on a slip of blank paper, in a small but distinct hand, the following note to his wife, which he inclosed in the cavity and again sealed the button together:

'Libby Prison

'Dear Wife—If we are not exchanged by the 1st of December, send me $30 in greenbacks. Put in a vial canned up in a can of tomatoes or blackberries. Send it in a box of provisions.

'J. F. Gallaher'

This note is well preserved, and was still resting snugly in its place in the button when shown to-day by Mr. Clutch. To continue the story, the button was made to take the place of another on the uniform of the exchanged surgeon, who reached home and delivered it to Mrs. Gallaher in due time. It could not have escaped the close scrutiny of the officers had it been conveyed out of the Prison in any other manner, as the officers were particular to search all of the exchanged prisoners, including the surgeon, most minutely. Mr. Gallaher did not have much hope that his scheme would succeed, even should the note reach his wife, but he was surprised, for the fruit arrived in a short time, and although closely inspected by the prison officials, they failed to discover the vial containing the money, concealed in one of the jars of thick preserves. Soon after receiving the money, Mr. Gallaher succeeded in making his escape from the prison, being one of the chief participants in the great tunnel expedition. He found the $30 obtained in so novel a manner to be of great service to him in reaching the Union lines."

CLUB NEWS

MICHIGAN

With a great deal of pride, Michigan reports 204 trays entered for competition in their all-educational Fall Show, at the J. L. Hudson Store, Detroit. This was the first time any group tried a display with one or more buttons and a picture or description of same, in one tray. Showing the story with the button portrays to the public the reason why people, interested in research, are button collectors.

The well-lighted, freshly painted auditorium, with 36 shadow boxes recessed in the walls, the island for the mass display, and glass show cases for the single button display, made the sort of an exhibit that Michigan has visualized for several years. D. D. Houghton, Ohio, rushed walnut frames to us, so all cards were shown in frames, which, in itself, made a beautiful display. The shadow boxes were the pictures in our story book of buttons.

Mrs. Sally Luscomb, Connecticut, was quest speaker, and also appeared on W.W.J. to describe the show.

At one o'clock on Wednesday the annual luncheon was held at the Women's Club.

Mrs. Irwin Smith, a past president, furnished the one hundred trays of buttons used in the window display. These the public looked at through the lenses of a huge imitation stereoscope.

The store furnished a room for a lounge, where collectors would rest and view the different group educational exhibits, and many other trays hung for display. One wall was used for place cards, favors and greeting cards made with buttons. A large table held the Camp Fire exhibit and scrap books of clippings.

Michigan again adds many good memories to our Button String.[P. P.]

At the Annual meeting of the Rhode Island State Button Society held on October 19, 1946, the following officers were elected. President, Mrs. Earl F. Quincy; vice-president, Miss Florence F. Edgers; secretary, Miss Edith Barnard; treasurer, Mrs. Irving K. White; member at large, Mr. Nahum Willard.

2. Spice Boxes, Cobbler's Benches and Drop Leaf Tables

By BILL KANE

If an object existed, its very presence in an environment gets it talked and written about. References to antiques in literature often establish with relative accuracy the period of genesis and give fascinating historical facts for owners of today to enjoy. The housewife with a kitchen well planned to exude antique atmosphere may know very well her charming spice box is a late nineteenth century piece, an antique by courtesy, and like it the more for knowing that in the year 1225 a writer who refers to the use of hot spices to cure a cold also wrote, "Hope is a swete spice widinne ye hearte."

Spices originated in the Orient, as did spice boxes. The decorative motifs of the first spice boxes were Oriental, and to this day decoration looking as if based on Canton or willow ware china is usual. In fact the Japanese who did such handsome work on tin boxes, artists of the Boston school of black and gold stencilling, whose period is from 1750 to 1890, seemed instinctively to choose to suggest the far eastern origin of spices in their painting.

Recently this knowledge was of value to a dealer. He bought a very interesting painted tray that had remained unsold because prospective buyers insisted it was not American. It does look Oriental, but in a decidedly unreal Yankee way. The border is a composition of elements often used by Staffordshire potters and spice box stencillers. The painting in the center represents a savage drawing bead with bow and arrow on a tremendous, toothy tiger. The savage is an American Indian, with headdress like that put on their Indians by makers of early sheet-iron weathervanes. The tiger is an animal visualized out of a book, with no relation to reality, by an artist who never saw a real tiger, even in a zoo. The Indian's hut and the trees are direct from an old spice box. The dealer has a treasure in primitive painting, a delightfully whimsical gem, a large tea-tray right in the atmosphere even to its suggestion of spiced tea cakes.

By 1533-34, in the Rutland Mss., I read, "Ye spys box with a little sponse to the same." How I should like to find one of these old fellows with its spoon! Most spice boxes and cabinets available today are antiques only by courtesy. I think the salt box of heavy pine with a drawer fitted with compartments for spices is a reasonably late refinement. I have never seen one that I thought was much older than fifty years. Hanging wall boxes of wood for spices were undoubtedly made by many a colonist a year or two after he had his first house large enough to have more than a single living room on the ground floor. Most of these just were out, I believe, because they are the scarcest of antiques, ranking in this respect with hanging spoon racks and hanging pewter or dish shelves. Devices of this sort made in the first years of the nineteenth century, from which time most American antiques date, probably were easily disposed of as kindling wood when their usefulness ended. I have seen not more than six truly antique spice cabinets, and each was a fascinating manifestation of a homecrafter's skill. The prices varied from $32 to $100. Most of us are content with a late spice box. As a hint, hoping it may be worth something, I add that the only right old wall spice cabinets I have found were in country stores, where in this day of packaged spices they were being used to store small hardware.

I have seen but one truly antique cobbler's bench. This one had a cabinet of drawers of various sizes to the cobbler's right, relic of the days when the cobbler actually made shoes, instead of just mending them. To the left of his seat were the usual small compartments for pegs, nails, etc., with half inch high partitions. I have owned a few benches that may have been more than fifty years old, and scores that were younger.

I always like to see a shoemaker's awl hanging in place, even if the present use of the cobbler's bench is as a coffee or cocktail table in a living-room. An awl is useful to spear olives, to make a hole in hard wood to start a screw, and to pink a burglar or defend one's hearth. A thing I like about any cobbler's bench is its reminder of the antiquity of the cobbler's craft. William Langland writes in the year 1362, in "Piers Plowman," of "Clement ye Cobelere cast of his cloke," and wonders me if that is the earliest reference in all literature to a man losing his shirt! In 1621 minister Richardson said in a sermon, "It is never well when the cobbler looketh above the ankle," "The Richer the Cobbler, The Blacker His Thumb," dates from 1710, so cannot be ascribed to Benjamin Franklin.

Many old time artisans journeyed to their customers. The shoemaker was one of these, and this fact has much to do with the scarcity of hundred year old benches. The bespoke boots that the cobbler's thriftiest customers bought were apt to be repaired at home, and by 1880 families were likely as not to have discovered the convenience of centralizing shoemending and to have a bench in the woodshed. Even as late as 1890, in my native Pennsylvania town, I had my shoes mended by my grandfather who was a stone mason, who had a small bench, lasts and tools, linen thread and beeswax in one corner of his summer kitchen.

In that same kitchen stood a large pine work table, with one drop leaf and five legs, one swing leg, and two drawers. This was a typical kitchen work table of the Pennsylvania Dutch kind. I have one quite like it today in my kitchen. Why should so many folks think it must surely have had a sixth leg and another leaf? The single leaf work table is convenient indeed; it stands with its length against a wall with its drop leaf ready to be lifted into place when needed, and its two drawers readily apprehensible. The first extension tables were single leaf gate legs, and have every appearance of having originally had no leaves at all. In the evolution of table design, the table with two leaves and two gate legs followed, and it was I believe as late as 1720-1750 before tables with swing legs without gate bottoms came into use. Was it as the result of the accidental breaking away of the bottom part of the gate that it was discovered that the full gate is not needed to support a leaf? I should like to know when this happened. In all my reading and research I have found nothing to suggest just when the grumbles of male diners, annoyed by gates that gave them pause as they chewed, were heard by an imaginative cabinet-maker.

Notice how the quotations I have been able to dig up prove my points. 1558 "One plaine table with one leafe." 1577 "A table with two leaves." 1611 "Round Tables take away contention; one being as neere his meat as another." And in 1665 Pepys wrote in his Diary, "Here I saw one pretty piece of household stuff;—as the company increaseth, to put a larger leaf upon an oval table."

I think any semi-antique cobbler's bench or drop leaf table is more desirable than any new one, unless the old one is in desperately poor condition. But I think it is absurdly pretentious to say of a semi-antique, "It is all original," because the question of originality is of comparatively little importance, except in the case of choice and therefore expensive antiques. Most buyers prefer a carefully reconstructed piece to one that needs repair. Present condition and price are, after all, of primary, consequence to the practical buyer of useful old pieces.

ANTIQUERS' FORUM

Tips For the New Dealer

There are four ways a dealer can buy antiques: from other dealers, through advertising, from the people who come to his shop, and from the home.

There are three methods of approaching a home: by knowing what is in the home and asking to see the specific things that the dealer knows are there, by taking some mutual friend with the dealer to the home, and by going "cold turkey"—"by guess and by golly."

Since the latter method of buying antiques has been so over-worked, it has come to some abuses which make the field rough and rugged for the dealers following. Several buyers grow disgusted and proceed to burn up the territory by offering $100 for an article not worth $10.

Once you are in the home, the best way to deal in small objects is in quantity. Set out a bunch for consideration. Yet this method can run into difficulties.

One day I had a table full of considerations. He wanted me to bid hoping I'd say more; I wanted him to venture. He might say less! (But the seller will nearly always make the dealer offer.) I made a fair price; he told me I was too low, and said that the best piece is worth $2, I closed that deal, and he selected the next article. Pretty soon I'd bought individually at his price the things I wanted. He and I got what we wanted, and we were both happy!—Roy E. Buren, Missouri

Likes C. O. D. System

Enclosing my check for another year's subscription to HOBBIES Magazine. It is the only thing I read from cover to cover.

I am taking this opportunity to mention a wish from a very busy person, and I can't help but think it would benefit many others. That is, if more advertising dealers would ship (C.O.D. Express Collect) on 5 days approval it would entail less delay and much less corresponding. This would also benefit the dealer by not having to hold the article so long and also getting it back sooner if it wasn't satisfactory, making a much faster turnover at the shop.

I have dealt through HOBBIES for the past seven years and up until recently traveled a great deal through my husband's work, so you can readily see that the C.O.D. system would have expedited my problem.—Mrs. Winifred A. Mathis, Missouri.

Cut Glass Bowl Now in Museum Exhibit

A product of modern industry, the famous Libbey cut glass punch bowl was recently presented to the Toledo Museum of Art.

This bowl, cut by John Denman, measures 25 inches in diameter and stands 24 inches high. On its completion it was given a first public showing at the St. Louis Exposition in 1904 where it won highest awards.

Presentation of the bowl was made by William E. Levis, chairman of the board of the Owens-Illinois and Libbey Glass companies.

"We believe this is the proper permanent location for such a fine work of art and it is only logical the bowl becomes a part of the culture of the community which gave it birth," Mr. Levis said.

William A. Gosline, Jr., accepted the gift for the Museum of Art and said that the "beautiful bowl will be treasured by the museum as probably the finest piece of cut glass ever produced."

He praised the glass industry for its products which have contributed so much to the cultural life of the city.

Guest of honor at the presentation ceremonies was Mr. Denman, who has 58 years of service in the Libbey plant.

James E. Bentley, Museum trustee, presided.

Following the presentation the premiere of the documentary motion picture, "Blowpipes" was shown. The exhibit of historic glass in the museum was opened following the formal program.

A Helpful Hint From a Reader

When you wish to retain a design or lettering on that piece of furniture or canister which you are varnishing or painting, simply spread a thin coating of melted wax over it. This preserves the design.

On Packing

Another dealer to win the plaudits of the buying public is noted in a letter written to Mrs. Allen Feeser, Maryland dealer. It concerns furniture and says:

"Thanks very much for the drop-leaf table which arrived yesterday the packing was excellent and the table all that you said it was. If you have other tables, please advise us. We also need several sets of nice chairs, etc."

M. Brach, San Francisco, Calif.

Question

I noticed in a recent issue an article about cleaning old bottles, and I wonder if any of your readers would know what to do about tight stoppers in old bottles.—L. Altman, Missouri

Sometimes just pouring hot water over the top of the bottle and the stopper has a tendency to loosen up the stopper. Keep in mind, however, that the hot water should be turned on gradually.

Glass And China

BOHEMIAN GLASS

From the National Magazine, Dec., 1853. Courtesy Arthur T. Ward.

This beautiful article is manufactured in various places throughout Germany, most largely amid the very mountainous districts of Bohemia; some of the best, however, is made in Bavaria and sent to Bohemia, and thence exported. The materials from which the glass is formed consist chiefly of the same as those used in England; the manufacturers themselves seem to believe that there is no difference except in the proportions of the materials, and in the fuel, which is exclusively wood, and produces, by a little attention, a more constant and intense heat than can be produced by any coal; the feeding of the furnace with the latter material, they say, always creates a change in the temperature detrimental to the fluid above, and never sufficiently intense. The wooded mountains of Bohemia are entirely inhabited by a population whose industry, morals, hospitality, and kindliness of manners do honor, not only to this rich and beautiful kingdom, but to the whole human race. They are pure Germans, not of Slavish origin, and the German dialect alone is spoken. Unlike every other manufacturing district I have ever visited, they retain unimpaired all their rural and primitive virtues. Clean to a proverb in their houses and persons, hospitable and amiable in their manners, simple in their habits, cheerful and devoted in their religion, they form, perhaps, the happiest community in the world. In passing through the country, a stranger would never find out that he was in a manufacturing district, but might fancy himself in the green valleys of a partly pastoral, partly agricultural people. Thickly inhabited, the beautiful little cottages, clustered into villages, or scattered along the glens, or sides of the hills, are embowered with fruit-trees, and encircled with shrubs and flowers, which each cottage cultivates with a zeal peculiar to his race. On every side rich fields of grain or pasture stretch out like a vast enameled carpet between the hills, which are clothed in dense forests of spruce, fir, pine, and birch, filled with deer, roe, and capercazie; they extend in every direction far beyond the reach of the eye, one vast cloud of verdure. The fabriques, or factories, are placed generally in the middle of one of these villages, the extent of which can only be known by going from house to house. So closely is each hid in its own fruit-bower, and so surrounded by shrubs and flowers, that the eye can only pick up the buildings by their blue smoke, or get a glimpse of them here and there as you advance; thus some of the villages are elongated to three miles, forming the most delicious walk along its grassy road, generally accompanied by a stream, always overhung by a profusion of wild-flowers, the mountain-ash and weeping-birch; many of the former only to be found in our gardens.

It has very picturesque effect to see the inhabitants of these villages with their simple costume; and if it rains, their umbrellas, often of rich colors like their glass, scarlet, green, and deep crimson, with beautiful ruby, emerald, or turquoise handles; not such as a stranger might suppose a gaudy glass bauble, but rich and massive, and having all the appearance of the solid gold and gem-studded handles of the oriental weapons.

The fabrique is built like the rest of the cottages, and only differs from them in size, and the shape and height of its chimney, which, emitting only wood-smoke, has none of the dense sulphuric cloud which blackens and poisons the neighborhood of coal-fed factories; it is never that ostentatious building for whose magnitude and embellishments the public are obliged to pay, in the increased charges on its production. The glass fabriques of Bohemia are all small, in fact only one large apartment, in the center of which is the furnace, a circular structure divided into eight compartments containing the melted metal for as many colors; one man and a boy are stationed at the door of each compartment, the former to extract the fluid with his pipe, the latter to hold the wooden mold in which the article is blown and shaped. The number of employed in an ordinary fabrique are: Eight men who work in the metal, take it from the fire, and blow it in the molds; eight help to hold the molds, etc.; four to stir the metal, etc., two breakers; four day-laborers.

The materials of which the glass is composed, as far as can be ascertained, and they seem to make no secret of it, appear to be the same as those in use in England: they say they derive their perfection from their mode of mixing and burning the material. Thus the principal component parts are:—Sand, Chalk, potash, brimstone, arsenic, mixed with various colors, regulated by the principal; Uran oxyd, cobalt oxyd, copper oxyd, nickel oxyd, chrome oxyd, minium, tin oxyd.

The gold used in ornamenting the glass is from the purest ducats, dissolved in strong acid, (artz wasser;) the oil with which the colors are mixed is of turpentine, (harz ohl.) Nothing is done in most of the blowing fabriques but mixing the material and coloring; and for cutting, polishing, etc., from three to six wheels are used. All the finishing goes on in the little cottages by which the furnace is surrounded, and with which the valleys and sides of the hills are studded; here you find, within the contracted chambers of these small block-houses, if on the ground-flat, standing on an earthen floor like our Highland cottages, an artist of the first ability, tracing the exquisite scrolls and flowers which we see in these beautiful works of art, and which are performed by men bearing all the appearance of simple cotters, but whose hand sweeps free and careless over the glass with the confidence and ease of an experienced artist, seldom being provided with more than two very ordinary looking brushes, a small one and another a size larger, and working frequently without any pattern, or indicating lines upon the glass, they are painting; but, perfect from habitude, the scrolls, and wreaths and flowers come out with the same facility as one traces a name upon the dewy pane of a window. Often the whole family are brought up from childhood in painting and in drawing on glass, and thus producing a race of hereditary artists; boys from thirteen and upward are employed in the most delicate works in this genre of art. Each cottage where the painting and gilding go on is provided with a small oven, into which the glass is put to bake in the colors, where it is kept for a day and allowed to cool down; the white figures and flowers, when they go into the oven, are of a dark chrome color, but come out pure white, as will be observed on examining any glass on which flowers of this color as painted; the gold, also, when laid on, is of a dead brown, and burnt in is polished, generally by women of the family. The gold in many instances is left unpolished, and only the stalks and fibers are burnished, which give an excellent effect. It is most interesting to go from one cottage to another; in one you are amazed by the exquisite paintings in gold, silver, and colors; in another, the cutting out all those beautiful leaf-work, lily, bell-flower, octagon, and star-shaped vases, which is done not only by men, but by their children, girls and boys. In one cottage I was particularly struck by a man, his two daughters, and son, sitting at as many wheels cutting the most elaborate, but delicate figures; shaping, from the merely turned over bell-vases, those beautiful varieties of lily and flower-indented lamps for suspension, and vessels for holding bouquets; tracing the scrolls, stalks, and fibers with the same ease as the barefooted wife and mother prepared their supper in the wooden bowl on the earth floor behind them; for there was but one apartment for the fine arts, the nursery, and the kitchen, yet all was neatness, perfect cleanliness, and order; while on the long beam which formed the sill of the three mullion windows was arranged a number of glass objects in the glorious colors of Bohemian art; ruby, emerald, topaz, chrysopras, turquoise, with pure crystals, which, richly cut, reflected, like a rainbow, the gems by which they are surrounded. In another cottage in Steinschoanu I was much pleased with the designs which two young men were painting, both in gold and colors; of which the former were scrolls of a very superior character, and the latter, flowers, butterflies, and insects.

I questioned one of the men respecting the forms and characteristics of those he was painting, and which were beautiful illustrations of Natural History; when he brought me in, from a little bed-room, or rather closet, two boxes full of exquisitely-preserved specimens of a great variety of native insects, which he had collected in his leisure hours, and arranged himself, to assist him in his painting. The copies were facsimiles of the originals, both as to colors and character. Among these insects I observed a beautiful miniature crawfish, not so large as a shrimp, a native, also, of the stream in his neighborhood. So identified had these productions of nature become with his imagination, that he was, at the moment I came in, painting some most correctly, without any specimen before him. It is impossible to express the feelings produced by these people, so simple, so industrious, and, above all, so modest. They could not refrain from surprise at the admiration their everyday productions created in us; and these simple artisans would with difficulty believe that their works were sought for, and thus valued, in all-powerful and wealthy England, where they believe nothing is unknown, nothing imperfect, nothing impossible! One man whom I visited is an extraordinary genius, rarely to be met with; he has been driven by the force of that same genius to seek abroad, in France and Bavaria, (Munich), food for his mind, and has brought back with him several folio works of engravings from the best masters, from which he designs. Placing before him one of these works, a Raphael, or a Rubens, he either copies the group, or composes from them to suit the form of his vase, which he thus embellishes with the most exquisite figures; his name is Charles Antoin Gunther. He lives in a little block-house, as humble as the commonest of those above described, on the declivity of a braise, by a small stream, on which stands the little scattered village of Steinschoanu. It is composed of only two apartments below, of which his work-room is one, and which is not above ten feet square, with just space enough to hold four little lathes for engraving glass, at one of which he works himself, while the other are occupied by three boys, the youngest twelve-and-a-half years old, the eldest fifteen! They all engrave beautifully pieces laid down before them by Gunther, and which they follow with a faithfulness and spirit only to be believed on personal inspection. He was at work himself on a vase-goblet, of the shape of the usual green hock-glass, but which might contain a bottle; it was lapis lazuli blue, enriched by a group of Bacchanalian Cupids and vine-leaves of his own composition, and worked with a spirit and freedom worthy of some of the masters by whose works he was surrounded. What struck me most was one of those exquisite little figures of Raphael's in his great picture of the "Madona del Sisto," in the Royal Gallery at Dresden; the cherub leaning on the parapet, with his chin resting on one hand, as he gazes on the Virgin. It is exquisitely drawn in pencil, a facsimile, and pinned on the wooden wall of the engraver's cottage, immediately opposite his seat. I asked him how he first traced on the glass the subjects which he was to cut; he replied by taking up a plain glass without any figure or indication on its surface, and asking me what subject I should like engraved. On my replying that, being an old deer-stalker, I should be very well pleased with a stag, he immediately applied the wheel to the glass, and in five minutes by my watch produced one of the most splendid, spirited animals, I ever saw in the forest, and really worthy of Landseer.

Bohemian glass painter

The stag is making a spring over some broken palings and rough foreground, and his action and parts can only be appreciated by those who have lived with the deer on the hill and watched them with the feelings of a hill-man, like Gunther, who has had opportunities of seeing the deer in his own native woods, where they abound. I brought this glass away with me, though in itself but an inferior article, merely as a specimen of what I had seen done by this man in the space of five minutes, and that, also, without a copy or anything to guide him on the smooth surface of the goblet. (Editor's note: could this piece still be in a collection?)

I send you sketches of the artist and dwelling; and as the portrait exhibits, at the same time, his native costume, it will be in every manner the more interesting, and cannot fail to give a correct idea of the character of this Bohemian mountaineer.

The sketch of Gunther's house will also afford an idea of these Bohemian artisans' dwellings, more so than any written description could do. I send you with it a drawing of another of these picturesque houses.

There are two classes of persons engaged, on a large scale, in the exportation of Bohemian glass—the fabricant and the collector. Generally speaking, however, the latter is the direct exporter, and he also superintends the cutting, painting, and packing. The fabricant is more frequently engaged in furnishing the collector, and to a great extent, with the glass in its original and more simple forms as it comes from the furnace, and it is then cut and painted by the cottagers who surround the dwelling of the collector, so that many of these villages are entirely formed by the collector and his people. Others, however, employed in the same way, cluster round the fabrique; but even their productions for the most part go to the collectors, who have their correspondents in America, Spain, Turkey, Greece, England, etc.

The glass villages are scattered all through the mountainous districts, whose ridges, and summits, and upper ranges are covered with a forest, which extends forty or fifty miles in length, by thirty broad; the fabricants maintain that the finer glass cannot be brought to perfection but by wood-heat, hence the glass fabriques are only to be found in these vast forests. One of the most interesting natural formations within this circle is the volcanic-rock, called "Spirlingstein" which shoots out of a little valley on the right bank of the Elbe, crowned with shattered mass of natural towers and turrets which it is difficult to believe, till closely examined, are not the ruins of one of those feudal holds crowning the summits of so many of the hills in Bohemia. We walked up the valley to visit a fabrique of Chichorie; in the way I remarked a little cottage, like the rest, with its fruit-trees and garden, but which had, in addition to its projecting roof and windows filled with flowers, both in pots and Bohemian glass vases, in carved oak, the scroll-work of which was quite classic, and the execution admirable. While I stopped to examine this, the fabricant who accompanied me remarked that the owners were makers of musical instruments. On inquiring of what kind, he replied a variety—violins, accordions, and others. I was met at the door by a man whose appearance was that of a simple cottager, and his manners indicated all the simplicity of rural life. He was told that I wished to see some of his instruments, upon which he bowed, slightly elevated his shoulders, and replied that he had nothing worth seeing, but would be happy to receive us, and showed us the way with that natural kindness and politeness which distinguish the peasants of this country. We followed him up a little carved-wood staircase, and he ushered us into a small, yet clean apartment, where, to my surprise, I found two rather large organs, sufficiently large for a moderate church. One was a peculiar instrument, a pan-harmonicon, invented by himself, with improvements and great facility and simplicity in tuning; it formed a concert of the single organ, brass horns, and kettle-drums, having a double row of keys behind, so that the performer was masked by the instrument, which had a handsome front; the face of it could be removed, to show the whole interior of the mechanical arrangement.

The little chapels in the glass districts are beautifully decorated with colored glass, the rich ruby lamps suspended before the altars, with their ever-burning lamps, the clusters of prisms in the great central chandelier reflecting the ruby lights, and gold, and flowers from the altar, are always independent of any other feeling—subjects worthy the contemplation of the artist. All the vases for flowers which richly decorate the country churches are of native manufacture—ruby, emerald, topaz, chrysopras; turquoise, and crystal chalices, full of the rarest of those flowers which form so much the delight and pastime of the inhabitants to cultivate, shed their delicious perfume through their chapels, mingled with the incense which, renewed daily, at morning and evening service, fills the buildings with perpetual fragrance.

Whether or not you restore and refinish,
you need the manual.

"Refinishing Antique Wood and Metal"

Proclaimed as the best manual of its kind.
Every worth-while finishing method is scheduled and step-by-step procedures are given.
YOU CANNOT GO WRONG.

One dealer said: "Among the many grand suggestions one alone is worth one hundred dollars to me."

Our own finishing shop secrets now told for the first time. Here are only a few of the numerous subject covered: Modern stains; those fast to light and those that fade. Paste fillers and how they enhance beauty of wood grain. "Pseudo fillers"—our own idea. Cause of "wood whiskers" and their bad effect on finish. How to overcome white paint in wood pores. How to change fiery red mahogany to brown. Wood and cement repairs—shellac, varnish, oil and wax finishes and our own improved method of dry-rubbing for final finish—all are in the manual. The best stenciling technique; no runs nor sags. Glazing, antiquing, shading. The better way of refinishing frames, metal, etc. Gyp finishing methods exposed.

The Publisher's Page

People all wonder about the results of the election. Some think the Republicans will now have to take the blame if things go wrong. Not necessarily—the executive is still a Democrat and has the powers given him to direct legislation and enforce the law. The laws which were given to him to enforce are mostly Democratic laws and they will continue to be responsible for how they work out. At any rate between double prices on paper and double prices on soap the publisher and his readers will hunt out the culprit and lay it to him.

Every once in a while we get a letter or meet one of our subscribers who remarks that we are not as hard on the Democrats as we used to be or that we have changed our policy some. We never were hard on the Democrats. They took a load of blame from us as well as from other people because they allowed their party to be kidnapped by New Dealers and thus they became the goats. On the other hand we have always said there is no difference between the Republicans and Democrats and we ought to get together and make a stand against Communism, which is really the minority party in this country. The Commies figure that they might again be smart enough to steal the Democratic party and its vote slaves by combining and nominating a parlor pink whom they will control.

The object of our wrath was Roosevelt, the New Dealer and not Roosevelt, the Democrat. F. D. Roosevelt was never a Democrat—he came from an old Republican family and had been raised a Republican. Of course he thought he could make use of the Roosevelt name and the popularity of Theodore Roosevelt who made it a great name. Naturally, he knew the first glory that came to the family would fall to Theodore Roosevelt's sons, so he conceived the idea of becoming a Democrat. Principle never was involved much in his plans—he just became a Democrat for convenience.

Few people realize that he ran for Vice-President with Cox and was defeated two-to-one. Later, he re-entered politics as an opportunist. He was willing to inherit the wet organization that Al Smith had built up although he had never made a speech for the wet cause. In fact he was almost silent about it in his race in 1932. It is ironical that it was the metropolitan press, headed by the Chicago Tribune, which worked up the wet sentiment—ridiculing and defiling the dries—and finally broke enough Republicans away on the issue to elect him. The liquor interests immediately deserted the metropolitan press, denying them any credit but set up idols of Roosevelt in every saloon where he could be worshipped.

He got where he was by the unscrupulous use of Federal funds after signing the unfair and unspeakable Wagner Law—a law that lets one man go free for doing the same thing for which another man would be criminally prosecuted. We have always maintained that no honest man would have signed the Wagner Act. But, of course, there was interest to be collected on the $500,000 loan by John L. Lewis. Roosevelt never could have gotten away with it except for his bribery of business men. Had the big corporations and Republican business men stuck together they could have refused to operate under such a law. But he was always able to get enough corporations down to Washington and tempt them with big contracts to go along with him. To one concern after another he allotted tremendous contracts to make up for their losses under the Wagner Act. By splitting the opposition he kept the business interests from combining.

There was nothing too low for him to use in gaining his end. He appealed to the craving for drink; he aroused the low instinct of envy on the part of the people against their more successful neighbors, he poisoned employee against employer, he destroyed the virtue of loyalty, all of which will haunt some of those who followed him when they take up the old American tradition of going into business for themselves. He appealed to the army of lazy and shiftless to demand pensions at the expense of the thrifty workers. In fact, he did more to destroy the character of the American people than any leader we have ever had. We heard an ex-service man say the other day that it would be 100 years before the evil that he aroused in our people could be driven out and they go back to the traditional American golden-rule "Do unto others as you would have them do unto you." What laughter that would arouse in a political discussion today.

The last time he ran, nobody wanted him, but he was in a position to knock down any head that bobbed up. He ran when he was scarcely able to move and scarcely survived his inauguration. He was not carrying on the office of President from the time of his nomination to his death. Those of both parties who were close to his affairs in Washington said he lived in constant fear of indictment. There were so many Constitutional provisions he had set aside and so many laws he had violated that he feared what would happen if he gave up the office. The way he conspired to bilk that one poor devil out of $196,000 was nothing. When the Republican Congress gets in we may hear of more and worse conspiracies, graft, racketeering—many of them involving the Roosevelt family. Nothing has been brought out yet, compared to what will be; nor do I believe in blaming poor old Truman because whoever would have succeeded this man would have been forced to take the condemnation directed against his predecessor as they gradually got on to him

—o—
We are now ready for the first time to announce officially the end of the boom in antiques. In our recent Chicago Show we checked carefully, and definitely found that we are meeting the opposition of automobiles, housing, and modern conveniences. Antique dealers had a wonderful thing for five years. Of course, certain types of collectors will always have enough money to collect as well as buy a new automobile occasionally along with other essentials of good living.

One dealer said, "I did not do as well as last year, but I did not expect it. Our problem now is to accumulate a stock at lower prices so that people do not 'price' the stuff and then walk away. We must get out and buy antiques the way they should be bought and quit buying them from each other, thus pyramiding the profits and expect the Show to furnish suckers to buy at still higher prices."

We had only one exhibitor kick and we knew she had been sick for some time and unable to take care of her antiques business properly. She said she had done less than at any of our shows she had been in. We told her that if we had known she was going to bring such a small stock of overpriced stuff we would have found some excuse not to rent her the booth because we had a big demand for booths from dealers who had accumulated good stocks to bring.

In our last show bulletin we tried to get a consensus about a Spring Show. We have always been opposed to them on the grounds that they made the show cheap and common by having them too often. Visitors do not get a thrill out of it like they would having it once a year. Yet others pointed out that they have them in Spring and Fall in New York. But they are very commercial in New York and many of them are a gamble for the dealer. They will eventually ruin themselves. We have tried to be cautious in keeping the Chicago Show glamorous and alluring, retaining the visitor's enthusiasm to come every Fall.

As we get ready to take a trip to the islands of the Caribbean, we are asking our readers, their opinion. Some of you come from long distances. The exhibitors say that nearly every other person they talk to is from some very distant state and wonder how we get them all together. It is nothing but the pulling power of HOBBIES. We don't feel that we can afford to lose your confidence by urging you to come to a show full of over-priced material. Neither do we want to urge the exhibitor to come and not have a substantial number of buyers. We are trying to get the pulse of the trade and are urging the smartest minds among you to give the situation as you see it and size up for us the trends in your own communities—all this so that we might give you the proper leadership.

We expect to return shortly after the first of the year and with your help we will be ready to announce then our plans for the Spring Show in case we have one. We will, at least, have the usual Fall Show and plans are well under way for that at this time.

If any of you succeed in writing a regular Wall Street summary of the future and what to expect for the dealers we would be glad to publish it. This is a subject on which everybody is grasping to find light and guidance at this time. There will be some differences of opinion but let us read all the shades of opinion for the enlightenment they will have in them.

The Chicago Antiques Exposition

The hobbyist get-together for 1946 brought out collectors from all parts of the United States. As usual there was a little difficulty in the room situation but most of the visitors reported that they had reserved their rooms weeks in advance to be sure.

It was heart-warming to see the large crowd lined up at the door on the opening morning—all collectors and dealers, eager to add to their treasures.

oOo

June Baker, conductor of the popular Home Management program for WGN, Chicago, was among those who lined up to get in early. Miss Baker collects "hands," and there weren't many such specimens left after she made the rounds.

oOo

The smaller items such as buttons and miniatures were very well represented. Excellent displays were shown in these sections.

oOo

The show was blessed with particularly good weather, making it possible for many in the middle west to motor in.

Because of lack of help and space HOBBIES was unable to keep a complete registry of out-of-town visitors, but among those from a distance were:

Mrs. T. Cloran, Oregon; Mason Day, Connecticut; The "Little Red House," Connecticut; Miss Frank, Montreal; Mrs. J. H. Burnley, Virginia; Mrs. Cora F. Phillips, Pennsylvania; Mrs. W. Longacre, Texas; "The Gingham Barn" antiques shop, Texas; Mrs. Charles Louis, Mrs. Will Yahn, Silas L. Spengler, William D. Whitford, Dr. M. D. Davis, Mrs. Marvin Malleck, Gistad Brothers, Adelaide Gumaer, Mrs. Louis Marcell, Lester Lengfeld, Wisconsin; Wilbur S. Deans, Mrs. James Sigler, Mrs. M. Van Vleet, James S. Jones, S. T. Darling, C. J. Malone, Mrs. Lula Kingston, Mrs. A. R. Thompson, H. D. Spicer, Lois Adams, Harold C. Allison, E. Gretzner, Mrs. Eileen Voss, Mary Thornton, Wm. Hambrink, Mrs. Alfred Juergens, Michigan; Stanley Fletcher, Mrs. Rose Smith, Mrs. C. G. Forney, Iowa; Mrs. R. M. Robinson, Dr. and Mrs. George Wichelow, Massachusetts; Alma Kent, Julia C. Layman, Mrs. Thomas Teasdale, Missouri; Mrs. H. E. Hansen, Nebraska; Vinetta Winterfield, Harvey D. Geyer, Mary C. Gleissner, Robert Ingabrand, Mrs. Lester Houser, Ohio; Ina Badger, Oklahoma; Mrs. May B. May, Pennsylvania.

oOo

DUNNINGER, the great magician, made a thorough visit to the show and paid a delightful visit to HOBBIES' office. He was accompanied by L. E. Dicke who had sold him many items for his collection. Dunninger collects general historical items. He was careful to explain that he is a magician and not a mind reader. Magic was our hobby for a number of years. We had between 200 and 300 tricks including making balls disappear between your fingers, finding lost coins in your clothing, and many others.

oOo

Mrs. Dorothy Fluke Many of Baton Rouge, Louisiana, spoke on the Bob Elson program WMAQ one night during the show. Alice Metz, American Home Antique Shop, Chicago, spoke over station, WMAQ during the noon women's broadcast conducted by Elizabeth Hart. Mrs. Metz also spoke on June Baker's program on WGN.

oOo

Mrs. C. J. Lampert of Fayetteville, N. Y., was one of the interested visitors. Dr. Gluck of Davenport, Iowa, who has never missed a Chicago Show was with us again.

oOo

Interesting sidelight among the dealers. Bernice Campbell, booth 66, received a telegram saying that she had become a grandmother for the first time. One hour later, Mabel Hunn, who occupied the same booth, received a telegram saying that she too had achieved the distinction of becoming a grandmother.

FOOT - O - TEN ANTIQUES

Where is that man with soul so dead, who said: There are no cherry dough troughs. Well, we have one; the present lid is of pine and we will furnish enough old cherry wood to make an extra lid. Yes I think all of this is worth $45.

Then here is a twin pine stool, 11" plank, 2 1/4" thick, 20" long, dish-out top, quaint turned corners at back with 4 of the cutest turned and tapered legs, 2 1/2" dia., you ever saw, 15" high; make nice vanity bench, or a prop for the corner of your house if you are thinking of a new cellar wall. You wonder how I will make a profit on this piece at $12. Here is the answer. Death of Publisher's Mother

As this issue goes to press, news comes of the death of the publisher's mother, Maria C. Lightner, at her home in Wichita, Kas.

Because of her advanced age of 86 years, Mrs. Lightner had not been able to visit HOBBIES office and staff as she did in her younger years, but she was deeply interested in the development of HOBBIES Magazine and the Museum of Hobbies. She knew personally many of the magazine's subscribers in her part of the state.

Perhaps, readers will recall the picture and reference to her in one of the long-ago-issues of HOBBIES.

She maintained a keen interest in life up to the very time of her death.

—O—

Death of Well Known Pipe Collector

J. F. H. Heide, 77, Chicago, who owned probably one of the finest collections of pipes in the country plus a great amount of literature on the subject of pipes and tobacco died early in November.

Many of the readers of HOBBIES will recall the series of articles which he ran in HOBBIES, some years ago, on the subject of his hobby.

Mr. Heide was in the process of putting his life-long collection up for sale at the time of his death.

News From Washington

The Post Office Department is urging the public to use a 3-cent stamp on all Christmas greeting cards in order that they may be given first class treatment as is done in the case of letter mail.

oOo

Since September 1, requisitions from the many thousands of postmasters throughout the country have been pouring into the Post Office Department in Washington, D. C. The orders represent stamps of all denominations in order to take care of the holiday demands for postage to be used on letters, packages and Christmas greeting cards. Thus the Post Office Department is anticipating one of its heaviest Christmas businesses in history.

oOo

Up to the end of October a total of 3,174,000,000 postage stamps of the 1, 1½ and 3-cent denominations have been dispatched from the Bureau of Engraving and Printing to the larger post offices of the nation. In addition, some 700,000,000 of the 5-cent air-mail stamps are already in the hands of postmasters and it is estimated that this quantity of air-mail stamps will be increased to a million for use of postmasters by the first week in December.

oOo

Sweeping reductions in air mail rates to foreign countries became effective November 1.

Mr. Hannegan said that the rate reductions resulted from conferences with foreign postal officials during his recent round-the-world trip to study international mail conditions.

"Foreign nations were enthusiastic about plans to reduce air postage rates," the Postmaster General said, "and they are only waiting for the United States to show the way."

"We are taking that lead," he said.

1946 Christmas Seals

Portraits of four pioneers in the Christmas Seal Sale movement are included on each sheet of the 1946 Christmas Seal which will be sold throughout the country from Nov. 25 through Dec. 25, by the National Tuberculosis Association to finance their work in tuberculosis control. The 1946 Seal shows an old-fashioned lamplighter.

The Seals are printed in a sheet format of 100, 96 of which carry the lamplighter design, with the four center Seals, Numbers 45, 46, 55 and 56, showing, in that order, Jacob Riis, Miss Emily P. Bissell, E. A. Van Valkenburg and Leigh Mitchell Hodges, all of whom played a part in the first American Seal Sale held in 1907. The portraits are printed in black on a white background with the names in the lower left-hand corner and a small double-barred cross in red in the upper right hand-corner.

Organized this year and having a Seal Sale for the first time, the Bermuda Association has adopted the NTA design, excluding the portrait Seals from their sheets and with a few other changes.

The lamplighter Seal was designed, from an idea by Miss Mary Louise Estes of the Duval County Tuberculosis Association, Jacksonville, Fla., by Lloyd Coe, who also created the 1938 Seal.

On the Bermuda Seal, the letters "USA" are eliminated and the letters "BERMUDA" replace the seven stars. The NTA design is also being used by Canada and England without the letters "USA." The Canadian Seals, as usual, are issued in the French text as well as English. The French Seals bear the words "Bonne Sante" and the English Seals the word "Greetings." The sheets are issued without the portrait Seals.

The Seals were printed by the Eureka Specialty Printing Co., Edwards & Deutsch Lithographing Co., Strobbridge Lithographing Co. and the United States Printing and Lithographing Co. The identifying mark of each printer, E. D. S. and U, respectively is shown on the 86th Seal in each sheet, in the ninth horizontal row, the sixth Seal from the left of the sheet, just above the letter "R" of the word "Greetings." The perforations in the Eureka printing are 12½ x12 and on the other three printings 12½ x12½.

Perfect City Found

HOBBIES Magazine has added a first day cover from Marineland, Fla., to its philatelic albums. The cover was mailed from this town on November 1 and an enclosure states that the last links in the re-establishment of Marineland as one of the smallest incorporated municipalities have been completed. The 25 qualified voters went to the polls on November 1 to elect city officers, and the Post Office Department re-opened the Marineland Post Office.

Some records set by Marineland for other Florida municipalities to shoot at are:

100% registration. 100% of those registered voting. 100% occupational taxes paid. 100% elected officials present at all meetings (Miami, please note.) Balanced budget (Truman, note.) No arrests (no city jail.)

At Marineland the new city officials will not only govern its 25 citizens but also more than 30,000 fish quartered in the tanks at Marine Studios.

IT SEEMS TO ME

Charity

A little discussion about the use of the word "Charity" and its mixing with "semi-postal." To the ordinary mind the words would seem self explanatory. Now comes a collector who says the word "Charity" is "often misused because the purchase and use is obligatory, legislated and legally enforceable, purchase and affix or the letter stays here."

Perhaps this is so; would like to hear more of the facts and know more of the "enforced" purchase rulings. Some of the rates do seem heavy, and sometimes (like Greece RA74-Axis pamphlet) the use of several seems to indicate charity—while a single seems to indicate "enforced purchase." That item comes in pairs oftener than in singles. Maybe sometimes directed purchase—maybe sometimes enthusiastic charity?

Also might be the currency affects the purchase—"take the change in charity issues."

A Letter From Africa

It is worth while to record part of a letter from an African correspondent, born in New England, and a collector of some fifty years standing. He says:

I read, many articles in your press that rise my temper. Some of the articles in the U. S. press are not 'articles' caused by research by the writer, but they are re-written gatherings of re-arranged and not always correct matter long since forgotten in the light of current excess issues and high pressuring. These may have been true when written, doubtless were true. But if the arranger who has access to a master philatelic library skips one or more interim articles, the resultant hash of alleged stated facts is lacking, altho the reader may feel he sits under the elbow of a real researcher."

It is easy to copy and re-word articles from past issues and then to garner a little self advertising as a "research expert," while the facts would indicate that the whole thing is a re-write.

"Some of the re-writers expose their laziness, and lack of self applied careful investigation. They leave the bars down in strange places and assert queer things, simply because they are lazy and it is easier to do a re-write in the alcove of a good Library."

He said more, but the real fact is here. The re-writer often does not even have a stamp, and some of the readers are prone to feel he has the only major collection of the issue talked about, in the country, or the world. Very deceiving, and upsetting to discover such chicanery.

More so because these same re-write sharks try to display personal knowledge by roundly abusing some real expert. Plenty of cases could be quoted. Some as frequent as a year back-and surely the material written of is beyond the financial ability of the person making the mouthings of acquired (?) knowledge.

Nothing Gained

One dealer is very careless about statements. Recently in a small store a youth was selling some blocks of European material, and the dealer said "Cancelled to order." The youth was not abashed, he knew his onions, and his stamps. He said "I think you want to get this block and these for very little—since when was the N. Y. registered double oval put on anything by favor or to order?"

Someone had to "go ashore or cut bait" right at that point. The dealer knew enough to quit. But he did not buy. The youth simply refused to sell. Someone else got some good material—maybe at the owner's price.

How can a dealer expect to be trusted when he deliberately tries to chisel; what did that one gain?

It is often easy to over-reach one's self by being too smart.

NUMISMATIC THOUGHTS

By FRANK C ROSS

Phases

Just what does the term "phase" embrace? A recent discussion brought up the question as to whether cracked dies on coins are a separate and distinct phase, or whether they should just be considered mishaps and classed as types. Some contend that a cracked die is merely a mechanical accident and thus has no lesson to teach. Others claim that a cracked-die represents a distinct step in the evolution of mintage from the crude hammer method to the present perfect mechanical process, a link in the chain of mintage evolution, and should therefore be considered a distinct phase of numismatics and not just an incidental inconsequence. Die cracks occurred very frequently in our early coinage, but the occurrences grew less as mintage methods improved. Heretofore cracked dies have been considered as types, but some collectors are now contending that they should be considered phases; that, for instance, in collecting early day cents, there should be two distinct and separate collections, one of cents without die breaks and another set of cents with die breaks. It is hard to break precedent, and no doubt the custom will continue of collecting die-breaks as types and not as phases.

It might well strike the average man that the process of manufacturing money is not an unimportant element in the study of money, and that coins therefore with birth-marks of cracked or broken dies on them, bearing witness to the evolution of mintage, should constitute a phase of the science of money, and not just a type or mishap.

Making a Come-back

After about a ten year iron-clad rule of con, Washington has relented and turned pro to the extent of authorizing two Commemorative coins, one the Iowa centennial, the other the Booker T. Washington, and both in sufficient numbers to insure their not becoming prohibitive rarities. Now that the non-commemorative precedent has been suspended, one is safe in predicting we will get at least two new commemoratives each year from now on. The issuance of commemoratives is not a recent innovation introduced to the world by the United States; it has been an age-old custom of the nations of the world; word comes from the newly established Philippine Republic that their first step was to issue five Commemorative coins memorializing the birth of their nation.

Washington gives three reasons for its opposition to commemoratives. One is that the sponsors use them for "exploiting unusual profits"; this is not a reason, it is an excuse, as Congress could prevent this by having them coined in sufficient numbers, for instance, 100,000 or more, and only one Mint. Another reason is that "they are easily counterfeited;" this too is only an excuse, not a reason, because a commemorative with its many designs is much harder to counterfeit than regular coins, and much easier detected. Counterfeit commemoratives would have to be disposed of mainly to coin collectors, and a collector would spot a phoney on sight. The third reason is that "they are confusing;" confusing to who? They are not placed in regular circulation, they are confined to collectors, and they are certainly not confusing to a collector, they are "right down his alley."

Coin collectors are preserving for posterity a metallic history of the United States, and the more material in the way of Commemoratives furnished them the more complete and voluminous the historical volume. The more than a hundred Coin Clubs, in addition to coin-minding the public, are compiling and preserving an indestructible metallic history of the world's greatest nation, the United States of America, and the government should help, not hinder them.

U. S. A. C.

The late war has produced many historical "documents" in the way of monies, documents that will record, detail and corroborate the money side of the conflict. And China and Japan furnish their share. One of the most interesting "stories behind the currency" is that of the U.S.A.C., United States Are Coming, paper currency put out by a puppet Japanese bank. Tatham Stamp & Coin Company in one of their advertisements gives the life story of this now famous U.S.A.C. note. Quote:—Some time in 1944 when the fate of the "Greater Co-prosperity Sphere" was still far from certain, some patriotic Chinese engraver had the audacity and courage to include the capital letters USAC in the intricate lathe-work of paper money plates for a new issue of 200 Yuan notes for the puppet Japanese Central Reserve Bank. The letters stand for "United States Are Coming" and a considerable number of the notes were printed and some put into circulation before the Japanese authorities discovered the hidden letters. The story of course went the rounds of the Chinese population and as a result the Japs lost considerable "face" for having permitted such a trick to slip past them. All printing of the notes was stopped, all uncirculated stock as well as the engraved plates were destroyed and the patriotic Chinese engraver executed—probably in a typical Jap manner with death prolonged through torture.

Seven Pointed Star

The eagle is a very familiar symbol on coins of the world, its use dating back through the centuries; but stars on coins—except that of the United States—are seldom seen. Using stars on our coins to symbolize the original thirteen states (and added stars for new states) was a happy thought of our early designers, not only for their artistic effect but for their historical aspect, a confirmation in a way of our motto E Pluribus Unum. Although for some reason or other we use both the five and the six pointed stars, it is the number of

ROSS' ANNUAL ODE

A very Merry Christmas, to you, Miss Pearl Ann Reeder,
A Happy New Year, too, to you, HOBBIES' able leader;
I am voicing the personnel, of each and every one,
In my congratulations to you for a war job ably done.
And I wish for Tuxedo, too—the office mascot cat—
A mouse-y Christmas dinner—for dessert, a luscious rat—
For having kept the office free of women-scaring mice,
An for having helped you keep the office snug and nice.
Miss Pearl, your tasks were very hard, but they did not o'erwhelm,
You set your chin, kept wading in, and mastered all of them
Now that the war is over—spoken of as a by-gone,—
I hope things will be easier for you to carry on;
That you'll continue giving the coin section its full share,
For I am specially interested in coinage odd and rare.
A Merry—Happy Yuletide to my enchanting boss,
"Here's How," and a "God Bless You" from the grateful

FRANK C. ROSS

stars and not the points that hold special significance.

However, in Australia the "point is the thing." They use both the six and seven pointed star. In the seven pointed star on the three pence of 1921 which I have before me, for instance, it is the seven points to, and not the star itself, that parallels our E. Pluribus Unum. An explanation from the Royal Mint of Melbourne clears this. Quote:—

As to the meaning of the seven-pointed star of an Australian three-pence of 1921, the design on the reverse of the coin is that of the Coat-of-Arms of Australia as existent in 1910, the date of the striking of the first Australian silver coins, all of which had the same design. The Coat-of-Arms originally had a six-pointed star, each point representing a state of the Commonwealth, but in 1908, after Papua was added as a Commonwealth Territory, the star was made seven-rayed. In 1913 a new Australian Coat-of-Arms was adopted, in which the seven-pointed star was retained in its position over the shield. The new Coat-of-Arms forms the basis of the design for the Australian florin of 1938, although not entirely in agreement. New designs were adopted for the shilling and three-pence also in 1938, the six-pence remaining unaltered, the old Coat-of-Arms.

A LONG WORD. On one of the types of the 1808 half dollar the designer must have been cramped for space—he uses STATESOFAMERICA, three words in one.

AN ODD ODDITY. One of the oddest and unaccountable mishaps in recent coinage is the reeded edged Nickel and the Cent of 1937. They are not freaks, they are perfect coins with reeded edges, but the reeding unintentional, and only about 100 of each got into circulation. They are selling at around $25 each.

EASY MONEY. The name "Rocking Chair Money" applies to the money being paid to government employees who are temporarily unemployed.

NOT WORTH JUNKING. (A.P.) The U.S. Mint at San Francisco wants to get rid of two tons of defective zinc pennies which popped up during the war. They are a drug on the market because junk dealers do not want to melt them down as the Mint demands.

KINDERGARTEN STUFF. One type of our 1836 half-dollars has the edge reading Fifty cents or a Dollar whereas it should read Fifty cents or half a dollar; and another 1836 half-dollar reads on the lettered edge, Oalf a Dollar, instead of Half a dollar.

THE SIZE of a coin, says a noted Psychologist, depends on the financial status of its owner. A nickel or a dime, he claims appears larger in actual physical size to a poor man than it does to a rich one.

NUTMEGS were used as money in parts of Connecticut during the Civil War. Nutmeg did not come to the housewife those days already powdered and in convenient can; housewives brought the nut itself and ground it as used on a nutmeg grater or in a little hand mill especially made for the purpose.

THEY HAD A NAME FOR IT. Probably the first paper money was that issued in China in about 807 A.D. It was called "flying money," but why this name was given it is problematical; perhaps because it was made of paper and reminded them of the flying kites, that is if the Chinese favorite pastime of flying kites was in vogue at that time.

TRICKS OF THE TRADE. "You may not be able to teach an old dog new tricks," said an old collector, "but you surely can play old tricks on a new dog, as I found out the hard way in my novice days by paying big prices for altered dates and Mint marks."

A PRECEDENT. Some well executed $20 counterfeit bills are in circulation; they are made in and shipped from China. They have one flagrant flaw; United States is misprinted United Slates. They have a precedent; one of our early coins reads United States.

WHY THE CHANGE? The complete sentence "In God we trust" first appeared on the 1864 two-cent piece, although earlier trial pieces used only the words "God Our Trust." Evidently the umpires decided a complete sentence better than a verbless one. They could have verbed "God Our Trust" to "God Is Our Trust," but they wisely selected the now familiar "In God We Trust."

Mouth Purses

Numismatics has many ramifications. The real numismatist approaches his coins from their storied back-ground, not their premium foreground. They are more interested in the "why" of a thing than the "that" of it. It is well known that certain ancient peoples placed coins in the mouth of a deceased with which to pay the boat-man for ferrying the soul across the River Styx, but who knows why they placed the coins in the mouth of the departed instead of in some prepared portion of the shroud. One researcher explains this ancient custom of "mouthing" the boat-fare thusly: The peoples' clothes contained no pockets, and when the buyers went shopping they carried their few coins in their mouths: the mouth was used as a pocket-book and it was natural therefore that the spirit in reaching for money to pay his fare he would expect to find it in his mouth. And when you think of it, it was no odder for the ancients to have used their mouth with which to purse their few coins than it was, up to recently, for our women-folks to carry their pin-money in their stockings.

Descriptive Money

New collectors are often confused when in reading articles they meet up with monetary terms they cannot locate in their statistical books, and assume the writer is in error. Quite frequently monetary terms applied to monies do not apply to specifically typed coins; the terms are merely descriptive. To cite a few:

CHIMNEY MONEY. Also known as hearth money; a tax laid on hearths in England, 1663, two shillings per hearth. Discontinued in 1689.

SHIELD MONEY. Also known as Scutage. A tax levied in England, 1159, on every knight's shield (scutum). The money paid was known as scutage or escuage.

WERGILD MONEY. An old Saxon custom. Money a murderer had to pay the relatives of his victim to avoid a blood feud between the families of the murderer and the murdered.

PETER'S PENCE. Voluntary contributions from all over the world sent to the Pope at Rome. This custom dates from the eighth century.

OBSDIONAL MONEY. Token metallic currency issued in a beleaguered city during war times. More familiarly known as siege money.

HAMMERED DOLLARS. Old Spanish coins in Mexico with the effigies of the hated monarch defaced (hammered) by the Mexicans.

Coins on Coat-of-Arms

Mabel Keech in the March, 1945, number of HOBBIES describes the Coat-of-arms of Ferdinando Gorges, a famous early American colonist of New England. The coat-of-arms shows three coins on the band. Coins appearing on coat-of-arms do not, however, place "arms" in the numismatic family, except possible as distant relatives. These particular three coins are bezants, Byzantine coins. Bezants were paid to the higher soldiers in the Holy wars. The bezant is better known as the solidus.

The bezant seems to have been a widely known and favorite coin, for the bezantee (old French besante from besant, a gold coin) is an ornamental design representing a series of bezants found on Norman moldings.

These bezants also appear on the coat-of-arms of the Lombards, the great European bankers and money lenders. The Lombards' bezants were the fore-father of the three golden balls of the pawn-brokers.

Ancient Norman Coins

Do not think for one minute that the boys over there left their coin thoughts back here. Every letter I have received from over-seas mentions "coins I have picked up." One letter is specially interesting and informative. Quote: Have not been able to secure a great deal of numismatic items in the past month since we have moved to a new location and are now in the country so to speak. Where we are now located (whose name I cannot disclose) there are traces of the Norman civilization. The Normans came to Sicily from Normandy, and eventually became very powerful in Southern Italy. Their style of architecture is very distinct, and is easily differentiated from the later Gothic or Baroque. But the Norman coins are very crude. I was able to secure a very few of the early bractates; which are almost like tinfoil and have the same design on both sides, but on one side it is incuse. This was followed by the coinage of deniers, which were like dimes, but had two types of them, usually a very crude head, and an eagle or cross; the inscriptions are difficult to read.

COLLECTANIA

FOREWARNED. When a coin is conspicuous for its absence in advertisements and in auction sales it is a safe bet to assume that the coin is becoming scarce and is due for a rise in value; it is a fore-warning to get one to fill your set before the advance.

A TEXAN (naturally, as, before the auto, Texans were raised in the saddle) has dubbed the old style large sized paper money "Saddle Blankets." They will always be fitting reminders of the Knights of the Saddle.

Recollections of an Old Collector

By THOMAS L. ELDER

Too Few Rare U.S. Silver To Go Round

The A.N.A. Convention sale proved there are far more collectors of U.S. silver coins before 1880 than there are coins, which causes serious comment. No use talking, there aren't enough 1877, 1c, 3c and 5c to go around, so the prices are being hoisted beyond rhyme and reason.

Many collectors cannot now afford U. S. dimes at $100 each and 1796 quarters at $250 a piece, but they can look around for some other series to collect. And there are many interesting lines. Take the American Colonial and continental coins which still presents a wide field of types, dates and dies. Also consider the Woods coins and the Fugios.

The Connecticut series is extensive with some overstruck, so is the New Jersey series, so is the Washington series. Collectors who cannot afford 1821 dimes at $11 each, can find many good coins among these series for from $1.50 to $2.50 per coin.

Don't Expect Coins At Old Prices

If there is one thing certain above all others today it is that the dollar buys less than formerly. It was devalued 41 cents in 1933. By 1939, Roger Babson has stated, it went off another 20% in value from 1933. You can judge yourself what has happened to it since last June 30, and the attendant mark up in prices all along the line, to agree with the orders passed by Congress.

On this account it is rather difficult to keep up with or properly appraise values today. It must be apparent to one who thinks that about the cheapest thing today is a gold coin. Even a $20 gold coin at $60, is dirt cheap, when the purchasing power of the dollar is remembered.

Small dealers who a short time ago secured some small cents say at moderate prices find themselves advertising the same at far below current auction prices, so it is very difficult to put prices on coins today. The duplicate orders which come in for such advertised coins shows which way the wind is blowing.

At the A.N.A. Convention sale held in August some wild prices were realized for all classes of coins. Little half dimes from 1829 to 1839, never considered very hard to get, sold from $4 to $6 apiece. No half eagle, even the latest dates sold under $17.50 per coin. Trade dollars sold furiously for the highest prices ever realized. An uncirculated 1796 dime of 1821 sold for $11. This writer has said all along that coin prices were cheap on the average in view of 77 cent pork and lamb chops and $50 hand-me-down suits of clothes.

The advice is to get coins and paper money. It is selling below the market for many other things on the average though not for special cases, like the above.

An uncirculated U. S. $20 gold sells among collectors from $65 to $70 today. Fine ones sold at the convention for $58.50 each. Coins seem to be looking up, so is about everything else. Small cents are far too cheap at current levels.

The 1908 S. Cent Becomes Popular

There is a widespread demand at this time for the Indian head cent of 1908 of the San Francisco Mint. Some new collectors who cannot afford the rare 1909S. Indians, or even the 1909S. Lincoln with initials, appear to center their quest on the 1908S. cent?

The writer remembers its advent in 1908, and he had a clerk in a big San Francisco bank working to pick up hundreds, even thousands of the new San Francisco cents as they came out. A California dealer writes me he does not offer a 1908S mint cent at under $2.50. When the coin is in better condition it brings $3.50 and uncirculated around five dollars, a respectable price. The entire coinage was two million or less, which was a very small coinage, considering today when millions are released of new cent issues. I think the 1908S. cent is slated for even higher prices.

He Doubles His Money On Slugs

At a celebrated coin sale which I held in 1929 two Panama Pacific $50 slugs were put up. An amiable farmer started bidding, and hung on until he finally secured them for $425.

Just this year a dealer had a call from an old customer for a set of all the U.S. coins of 1915. This dealer was fortunate enough to have attended that big auction sale, where some world's records were made, and he remembered that this old German-American farmer had gotten the two slugs outbidding members of the N. Y. stock exchange. So he got in contract by letter and the old gentleman finally offered them for $1,000, an offer which was not accepted, but still hardly the top price today.

The dealer finally offered $850 and secured the two slugs in their original wrappings. So this collector doubled his money on the slugs. This interesting incident proves that one does not lose by holding onto coins for years and refusing to sell against what seemed to be good offers at the time offered.

The 1915 set has steadily advanced in price; in fact it is now very rare and after all this is not remarkable as only a few hundred sets were sold at the time. The complete set of five coins sold I think for $200 only in 1915. This set included four gold and one half dollar specimens.

A Three Dollar Gold Story

I have always considered the three dollar gold piece, one of our rarest, first because fewer were struck than any other U. S. gold coin. Its rarity has begun to be shown by recent prices. When I went to New York city in April, 1904, I was acquainted with an interesting character, George Anders of Norristown, Pa. I never knew just what business he was in, but I suspect he had some little county office which took him around the country.

Anders began to sell me nice uncirculated three dollar gold coins and always of only two dates, viz 1879 and 1880. On looking up this coinage it is found that only two or three thousand were struck in each of those dates, so the coin has always been scarce. Anders commenced to produce these coins by the dozen, then in forty and fifty lots, and finally in hundred and two hundred lots. The price always was the same $4.50 per coin, and the condition perfect with many example, which could be called proofs. The dies were little used which produced beautiful impressions. At that time I had Ben G. Green of Chicago on the string and he bought many of these from me at $5.50 or $6 each. The price is now about $30 a coin. It is a shining example of the fact that if dealers had held many of their coins, bought at cheap prices, for twenty-five or thirty years they could have cashed in on them in a handsome manner. George Anders has been dead twenty-five years at least, but with his death the 1879 and 1880 $3 coins stopped coming onto the market. He evidently had discovered a cache of them somewhere in his travels.

The coins were promptly grabbed by collectors and no quantities have been coming onto this market in recent years.

Here's New Delight For Men of Might!

By BILL KANE

Somerset Maugham blundered seriously in discussing the art of expression in words when he maintained that details of recognition are of small importance in interesting readers. Without the recognized details that are invariably part of a "new" idea, details of revelation and conclusion cannot be conveyed even to the most intelligent. I was reminded of this as I opened Stephen V. Grancsay's "American Engraved Powder Horns," a magnificent book published by the Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York, N. Y. After reading the preface and table of contents, I turned at once to the section devoted to "Rhymes from American Powder Horns." With great delight, as I conned the verses I recognized favorites that I had seen on powder horns, on samplers and in illuminated manuscripts. I was especially glad to read this one, "Men of Might They Take Delight in Gun and Sword That They May Fight," which is the rhyme on a carved priming horn made by James Cox "ye Year 1776." This small horn, which James carried in his blouse, filled with quick burning powder for priming his flintlock, hangs with his gun, also marked "1776," above the fireplace, 5 by 9 feet, in the older part of my pointed stone house, which dates from the middle 1700's. I was further interested to observe that Mr. Grancsay, who is curator of arms and armor for the Metropolitan, records every other rhyme I have ever seen on a powder horn, except two. "Let us rise and do our part And stab the bloody tyrants to the heart; Liberty or Death," carved by Daniel Beede, of Sandwich,

N. H., on his horn in 1775, and "As Runs the Glass Our Time Doth Pass" incised on the horn of T. Webster that I shall refer to later.

Mr. Grancsay has missed so little of which I am aware that it is easy to be specific. He writes that he knows of carved horns that sold for sums in four figures. This is so startling that descriptions of the horns and the circumstances of the sales would be very interesting. The finest horn I have ever seen, and I include the Metropolitan collection that is carefully and completely described in this great book, was carved by T. Webster of Canterbury, N. H., in 1758. The carving shows an illustrated map of all the country from Massachusetts to the St. Lawrence and St. Francis Rivers, with many original names that indicate that T. Webster's map is not copied. It is reasonably accurate, and the 1758 place names are mighty interesting. The horn is a large one, 18", and with Mr. Webster's musket, a Charleville of the 1740 vintage, is in the possession of a collector who did not pay anything like one thousand dollars for both horn and gun.

Mr. Grancsay says that New England and Pennsylvania engraved horns are scarcer than those of New York state. This is true, and horns marked by Pennsylvanians are scarcer than New England horns. This is more notable, when the predisposition of Pennsylvanians to carve and decorate is considered. Horns marked as carved by sailors are very scarce. Horns carved by American Indians are fairly common. Horns on which owners carved records of their hunting and fighting experiences are scarcest of all. Among several hundred horns that I have seen only one was a diary horn. This was an exceedingly interesting horn carved by John Willoughby in 1757. John lived in the Connecticut Lakes region of New Hampshire—Quebec, and on this horn, which he said was number four, he carved a record of his experiences as a hunter among the French and Indians. He was a self taught scholar and his patois of old English, French and Indian is fascinating. I should like to turn up John Willoughby's other horns.

These trifles are all that Mr. Grancsay has omitted. Readers of HOBBIES who own engraved and dated or unusual horns with outstandingly identifiable details engraved thereon may help to add to a very useful check list of 1044 carved horns, with owner's names, that is part of his book, by communicating with Mr. Grancsay. More details of value to historians, artists and genealogists may thus be unearthed and preserved. Mr. Grancsay's book is a definitive study in a fascinating field of antiques, and those who help to increase the facts at the author's disposal may take new delight in their possessions. The names of many readers of HOBBIES are noticeable in the present list.

The illustrations in this book are very fine and admirably supplement the text. Many of the horns in the Metropolitan collection are shown in collotypes, and details of unusual decorative interest are presented in opened out drawings. Students of primitive motifs in decoration will profit from study of these drawings. The annotated bibliography is complete and suggests many new sources of fascinating reading for students of Americana. The Metropolitan is one of the great museums of the world and in this publishing venture it serves well one of its functions, and makes another of its wonderful collections even more interesting and easy to comprehend.

For the delight of readers who like the primitive I quote exactly the following, one of the most fitting rhymes every engraved on a powder horn:

At first I was wore by a bull
And then by an ox in full pride
But now I am filld with powder full
And wore by a soldier's side.

I am further delighted to see that this horn is one of those rarities, a Pennsylvania piece, carved by William Brown, dated 1781. The horn is now preserved in the Museum of the McKean County Historical Society, Bradford, Pa.

The Field of the Forty Footsteps

By JOHN LAKMORD WAYNE

Until over a century ago the ground in the rear of Montague House, Bloomsbury, lay waste. Being on the edge of the great city of London this region presented a ready arena for its idle and dangerous classes. It appears to have been originally called Long Fields, and afterwards Southampton Fields. They were the resort of persons who fought with fist, guns, or rapiers, especially on Sundays. Such was the state of things at the beginning of the 19th century. Montague House occupied seven acres. In the latter were encamped, in 1780, the troops stationed to quell the Gordon riots; and a print of the period shows the ground in the rear of the mansion laid out in grass-terraces, flower-borders, lawns, and gravel walks, where the gay world resorted on a summer's evening.

The Long Fields seem to have been early associated with superstitious notions. Aubrey tells us, that on St. John the Baptist's Day, 1694, he saw, at midnight, twenty-three young women in the parterre behind Montague House, looking for a coal, under the root of a plantain, to put under their heads that night, "and they should dream who should be their husbands."

But the Long Fields have more ghostly legends. One of the period of the Duke of Monmouth's rebellion relates of a mortal conflict in these fields between two brothers, on account of a lady, who sat by; while the combatants fought so ferociously as to destroy each other; after which, their footsteps, imprinted on the ground in the vengeful struggle, were said to remain, with the indentations produced by their advancing and receding; nor would any grass or vegetation grow over these "forty footsteps." Miss Porter and her sister upon this legend, founded their romance, "Coming Out, or the Field of the Forty Footsteps," but they entirely depart from the local tradition. Early in the 19th century, there was produced, at the Tottenham Street Theatre, an effective melodrama founded on the same incident, entitled the "Field of the Forty Footsteps."

Southey records this strange story in his "Commonplace Book," (2nd series, page 21). After quoting a letter from a friend, and recommending him to "take a view of those wonderful marks of the Lord's hatred to duelling, called 'The Brother's Steps,'" and describing the locality, Southey thus narrates his own visit to the spot:

"We sought for near half an hour in vain. We could find no steps at all within a quarter of a mile, no, nor half a mile of Montague House. We were almost out of hope, when an honest man, who was at work, directed us to the next ground, adjoining to a pond. There we found what we sought, about three quarters of a mile north of Montague House, and 500 yards east of Tottenham Court Road. The steps are of the size of a large human foot, about three inches deep, and lie nearly from north-east to south-west. We counted only seventy six; but we were not exact in counting. The place where one or both of the brothers are supposed to have fallen is still bare of grass. The laborer also showed us the bank where (the tradition is) the wretched woman sat to see the combat."

Southey adds his full confidence in the tradition of the indestructibility of the steps, even after ploughing up, and of the conclusions to be drawn from the circumstance.

Joseph Moser, in one of his "Commonplace Books," gives this account of the "footsteps," just previous to their being built over:

"June 16, 1800. Went into the fields at the back of Montague House, and there saw, for the last time, the forty footsteps; the building materials are there, ready to cover them up from the sight of man. I counted more than forty, but they might be the footprints of the workmen."

BOOKS REVIEWED

FOLK ART OF RURAL PENNSYLVANIA. By Frances Lichten. Published by Charles Scribner's Sons, 597 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y. Price $10.

This book does not pretend to be an exhaustive treatise on Pennsylvania folk art. As the author explains, the field is too wide for that, too replete with individual interpretations of the preferred motifs. It is voluntarily restricted by her interest in and practice of the applied decorative arts. She has enriched it by a love of the picturesqueness of the long-established Pennsylvania German countryside, and by a deep appreciation of all its ways.

Some of the chapter titles show how comprehensive the contents are: The Historic Soil; From the Earth Itself—Clay—into; plates, roof-tiles, dishes, vases, crocks, coin-banks, mugs, ink-wells, ornaments, toys, pitchers, fat-lamps, platters, colanders. From the Surface of the Earth—Grain into Straw—Thatching, baskets and hampers, bread baskets. From the Woodland, Wood into Housing, trinket and candle boxes, dower and blanket chests, dressers and cupboards, salt and spiceboxes, chests of drawers, tables, dough troughs, ornamental wood-carving, weathervanes, carved inscriptions, butter molds, bag stamps. From Beneath the Surface of the Earth—Stone into: Housing, gravestones, house mottoes, date stones. The Love of Color—Barns and their Decorations.

One cannot help getting a mental stimulus reading this book for it portrays the love of beauty, resourcefulness and sturdy character of the early settlers of rural Pennsylvania. There is much in this edition to interest the collector of Americana.

The material in this edition is well-organized and we believe that it will be of real service to the collector.

INDIAN LORE: ANCIENT AND OTHERWISE

By WILSON STRALEY

Around the northwestern angle of the Gulf of Mexico, and encircled by tribes belonging to the large and better known linguistic families called Muskogean, Siouan, Caddoan, Athapaskan, Uto-Aztecan, Otomian, and Mayan (the last named represented by the Huastec), there was early in the sixteenth century a great number of tribes or bands which differed markedly from their neighbors in language and showed great diversity among themselves. These tribes extended from the Mississippi River to the neighborhood of Panuco, Mexico, on the South and Monclova, Coaguila, on the west.—John R. Swanton, "Linguistic Material from the Tribes of Southern Texas and Northeastern Mexico," B. A. E. Bull. 127.

The Stone Age Fair, held at Loveland, Colo., September, 27, 28 and 29, proved a success in every particular, and Manager Harshbarger reports there were some 7,000 interested persons from Colorado and adjoining states in attendance. In addition to choice exhibits of Indian relics, geological material was displayed also, by both professional and amateur collectors; lectures were given by prominent archaeologists and geologists each afternoon and evening. During the session the Fair was formed into a non-profit corporation, and will become a permanent affair under the name, "The Original Stone Age Fair of the World at Loveland, Colorado," with the following officers: Rome R. Dietrich, Denver, president; Mayor H. H. Markley, Denver, George E. Bowman, Denver, Fred Andrews, Loveland, Jack Moomaw, Estes Park, vice-presidents; Ira Harshbarger, Loveland, secretary-treasurer; one hundred persons from Colorado and adjoining states will be chosen as a board of directors. Plans for next year's show have already been placed in motion.

"Sociology of the American Indians," by S. M. Barrett (Burton Pub. Co., Kansas City, Mo.) 142 pp., illustrated. The author formerly taught in the University of Oklahoma, and it was then he took up the study of the American Indian, and wrote some eight or more books bearing upon the original Americans. This, his latest work, is not only informative, but entertaining as well, is so arranged that the work could be well used as a supplemental reader in school work. Mr. Barrett features the real nature of the aborigines—his social, religious, industrial and war-fare practices in a sympathetic manner, giving an insight into the history of the various tribes. The author was born and reared on the frontier, holds the degrees of B. S. and M. A. (University of Missouri) and now at the age of 81 is retired from active life, and resides at Independence, Mo.

In May, 1790, John Tanner, a boy about nine years old, was captured by a marauding band of Shawnee Indians near the mouth of the Big Miami river, while out in the woods gathering walnuts which had been hidden among the leaves from the previous season.

After going to the Shawnee village on the Auglaize, the boy was taken to the Upper Mississippi which, of course, baffled the search which was made for him.

In 1817, 27 years later, Tanner, who by this time had married an Indian wife and had six children by her, came down the chain of lakes to Detroit and there reported himself to Governor Cass as an Indian captive taken from near the mouth of the Big Miami river in 1790.

He had hopes of learning something about his relatives. Cass gave notice of the facts through the press, adding that the captive would be present at treaty to be held with the Indians at St. Mary's, formerly Girty's Town, the county seat of Mercer county.

Fortunately, a relative of the captive saw the notice, went to the treaty ground, and there discovered the captive boy. The two then went to visit the immediate relatives who were living at New Madrid, Mo.

Origin of the Eskimo

The Eskimo arrived in North America in two great migrations from their homeland in Siberia.

The migrations perhaps were separated by an interval of several centuries.

This is the thesis advanced by Dr. Diamond Jenness, curator of anthropology of the National Museum of Canada, in one of the reports of the Smithsonian Institution.

There are, he points out, three ancient Eskimo cultures recognized by archaeologists. One was the so-called "Old Bering Sea," restricted to Alaska, Siberia, and the Bering Sea islands. Second is the Thule, which originated in Alaska or Siberia but which spread eastward. Third is the Dorset which is restricted to the East. The latter is very similar in some respects to the Old Bering Sea. It was a culture of chipped, rather than polished stone implements. It has various elements suggestive of Indian rather than Eskimo.

It is significant, Dr. Jenness points out, that in both the Old Bering Sea and the Dorset culture remains there are no large dog bones nor parts of dog sleds or harness. Numerous remains are found of a smaller dog kept for slaughter and eating. Dog bones, sled runners, and harness buckles are common in Thule sites, showing clearly that the dog sled had then come into use. The Dorset people possessed no pottery while the Thule Eskimos did. The bow-and-arrow, snow shoes, and whaling also were unknown to the Dorset cultures, while they were familiar to the Thule.

This can be explained, Dr. Jenness holds, if the ancestors of the Old Bering Sea and Dorset people are assumed to have been relatively early migrants from Siberia who reached Alaska sometime in the second millennium B.C. The Dorset Eskimo can then be considered as an early branch pushed eastward by the invasion of the ancestors of the present Athapaskan Indians, whose chief modern representatives are the tribes of interior Alaska and Canada and the Navajos of the Southwest.

Much later, some time in the first millennium A.D., he holds, the men represented by the Thule culture, made their way out of Siberia, and moving eastward along the Arctic coast, carried the knowledge of log traction and whaling as far as Greenland. In Canada and Greenland they encountered and merged with their predecessors, the Dorset people.

Iroquois Rituals

Rituals and music of the midwinter festival of the Iroquois, the "feast of fools" described in the 17th century Jesuit Relations, were recorded a few years ago by one of the Smithsonian ethnologists.

This ritual is one of the most interesting of aboriginal American ceremonies because it perpetuates basic ritual and musical patterns that were first observed by white men 300 years ago.

The meaning is deeply rooted in Iroquois psychology. The entire performance is a dream-fulfillment ceremony, deemed essential to ward off sickness caused by unfulfilled dreams or to retain the favor of the supernatural figures, such as the cosmic animals, which have a central place in Iroquois mythology.

An Iroquois feels compelled to fulfill his dreams. An Indian dreams of one of the cosmic figures and is required to make some sacrifice annually to retain his favor. The midwinter festival is the occasion when these debts are paid, since a dream is supposed to establish a contractual relation between the dreamer and the thing dreamed. Everyone has some such obligation to meet, either to a ceremony, a game, or the animal patron of a curing society.

"All who have old dreams shall renew them.
And all who have new dreams shall fulfill them."

This is the recurrent theme of the festival whose rites range from what seems pure buffoonery to something approaching the sublime.

It might be, for example, that one Indian is required to have a game of lacrosse played annually because he has dreamed of it while sick. There may be several hundred such obligations to fulfill. Naturally there is a good deal of merry making, for once his debt to the supernatural has been paid, an individual feels a great load of anxiety taken off his mind.

The climax of the symbolism comes on the fifth day when—if the ancient formality can be carried out—a white dog is strangled and burned with appropriate rituals and music.

The central idea, as the Iroquois explain, it is that the tribe is carrying out a dream obligation of the Creator himself. Long ago he had a dream in which he was instructed to sacrifice a white dog each winter. The Indians believe that they are fulfilling this duty for him. They are presenting a dream taken to the Creator.

Actually a white dog has not been sacrificed for almost 30 years because the Indian dogs have long since cross-bred with stray farm dogs. The animal sacrificed for the Creator must be pure white and a physically perfect specimen of the old Indian breed. White is associated with the Creator because it symbolizes purity and peace. This year the one animal on the reservation that was pure white escaped being burned because, as a punishment for killing chickens, its master had chopped off the end of its tail.

Indian children have always been fond of their dogs. Little boys whose pets have been taken from them for sacrifice console themselves during the rest of their lives in the faith that the animals are all gathered at the Creator's feet and will be waiting for them in the Skyland when they die.

After the sacrifice of the dog there are four more days of ceremonial, some of it of exceptional beauty. It includes some of the finest aboriginal music. Records of this music obtained have been deposited in the Music Division of the Library of Congress. Translated texts of ceremonial addresses which were recorded years ago in native Onodaga have also been made by the Institution.

Hopewellians

The Hopewell people represented in central North America the highest development of aboriginal civilization, comparable to that of the Maya in Yucatan and the Aztecs around Mexico City, although probably not so far advanced. Unlike the others, however, all traces of them are prehistoric. The Mayas, the Aztecs, and the pueblo builders of the Southwest were flourishing when the white man came, and their descendants in the direct line are still living.

But nobody knows what became of the Hopewellians. There are not even any Indian legends about them. It is highly unlikely that they disappeared without a trace. They must be represented in the ancestry of some living tribes. All efforts to connect their culture with that of any extant people, however, have ended in failure.

However, a few years ago new light on the art techniques of the mysterious Hopewell people, the Mound builders of the Middle West, came from the accidental discovery near Kansas City of an almost intact specimen of the instrument with which they made their intricate geometric and other designs on pottery.

It was a deer horn, with notches out in its elliptical bottom, in the style of a roulette. By "rolling" this over the unbaked clay vessel the Mound Builder artist was able to produce easily designs which would have been very difficult to make with a stamp.

The find was made by H. M. Trowbridge of Kansas City and sent to the Smithsonian Institution, where it was welcomed by anthropologists as the solution of a problem over which there has been much controversy. Dr. Waldo R. Wedel of the Smithsonian staff, using the instrument in the laboratory, was able to duplicate almost perfectly the style of decoration found on pottery fragments recovered from the Kansas City area. This is on the periphery of the Mound Builder territory. Very similar markings, however, are found on artifacts recovered from sites of the highest development of these people.

Still Good, After 8 Years

Indiana—It is certainly a wonderful magazine. Have been reading it for the past eight years.—Mrs. Joe Horseman.

Covers Its Field

South Carolina—I enjoy the magazine very much—so versatile in character, that any hobby enthusiast can find something to interest him.—Mrs. Hal Kohn.

Served in Buying

South Carolina—We have found your magazine to be most helpful to us. It has enabled us to secure many lovely pieces of old china and glass and also old pieces of furniture, from many different states. We have been able to obtain some odd pieces which we were unable to locate in our section of the country.—Cannons' Antique Shoppe.

Finds Odd Piece

Missouri—Many thanks to HOBBIES; I received a base for my frosted lion lid, through my ad in April HOBBIES. I bought the frosted lion base from a lady in Kansas, and had a reply from Canada. I was very fortunate in finding one; the oval dishes are scarce.—Mrs. I. Benton

Worked for Reward

Oregon—I want to take this opportunity to thank you for your long continued support and loyalty to me in the many valued years I have been advertising in your most outstanding magazine. It has brought me the finest type of customers and friends who rely on me with confidence for their wants from time to time. Seeing my ad month after month, year after year, they feel one is in business to stay and that they can deal with confidence. In this manner I have built up a lucrative mail order business, which of course, has not been done over night, but through many years of reliable service to my customers.—Mrs. Helena Jones.

Buying Thru Hobbies Carries a Reasonable Guarantee

Arkansas—There is hardly a week goes by that some visitor doesn't come into my shop with a HOBBIES clutched under his or her arm. They are looking up the shops listed therein.—Vera Gibson.

It's Tops

Florida—I enjoy HOBBIES more than other magazine. Enclosed check for renewal.—Mrs. Grace H. Teague.

Knowledge Gained

New York—Please send me HOBBIES for another year, and the "Button Parade," by Dorothy Foster Brown. I think we all owe Miss Brown this much as her drawings in HOBBIES have been wonderful. HOBBIES is a magazine that one cannot forget. It's like a close friend, always a help and a pleasure to have. Thank you for all the wonderful knowledge I've gained, and keep up the good work.—Mrs. E. M. Crounse.

Stands Alone

New Hampshire—I look forward each month for the magazine's arrival, and every member of my family finds something interesting in it. I don't know of any other magazine that I can say this about.

A Thought on Economics

Delaware—I've been a reader of HOBBIES for some time. I don't know what a lot of your followers would do without it. Everything has gone up, and antiques more than anything else, so I don't think it would hurt any if you raised the price of your magazine to $3 a year and let the newstands get 35c a copy. This would put more money in your hands.—Peter J. Simeone

A Help

Pennsylvania—I find this magazine a help in our work, especially during the existing conditions.—Aaron Zisser.

Beyond Expression

Pennsylvania—I can't express the enjoyment I get out of reading HOBBIES.—Myrtle B. Buckley.

Exceeds Expectations

California—My ad expired with the March issue. Renewing it is just a matter of finding room for my collection. I had far better results than I thought possible.—Bernis M. Cronkhite.

It Was a Whopper

California—The avalanche of letters keep coming from my ad in HOBBIES, which kept me from writing earlier to thank you for helping me add to my collection of antique hat pins. As soon as I recover from my correspondence, and shipments, will run another ad. It was a huge success, and I'm proud of the way your readers co-operated with me.—Sally Margolis.

Good Luck!

Ohio—This is our 13th year for HOBBIES, and we are not worn out yet, and may this lucky 13 be yours and ours. Best wishes.—H. J. Kessling.

There's Always Something Else

North Carolina—I have found many a prized possession through the dealers, and even though I don't always get my wants, there is another month of HOBBIES coming up and new adventure in the "World of Antiques."—Jack G. Mock.

Makes Friends

California—I enjoy your magazine very much, and I have also profited by the advertisements I have answered, and the friends I have made through "HOBBIES."—Lottie B. Holiday.

The Missing Link!

Massachusetts—Got my first introduction to HOBBIES yesterday, and it was just what I was looking for. Have recently opened a 'Hobby Shop' of my own here, and know your magazine was the missing link.—Henrietta L. Leighton.

Stimulates Mail

Florida—I am very much pleased with the results of my ad, as I have received 150 requests for my price lists and more are coming in each day.—Tom Wolfe, Jr.

Pulls Like Mules

Illinois—My directory ad check is one check I am always happy to write, as I find this small ad "pulls better than a team of Missouri Mules." So here goes for another good year, thanks to HOBBIES.—June Latson.

Old Timer

Washington, D. C.—Mr. Lightner has done a marvelous job with HOBBIES. I have subscribed to it continuously, almost from the first.—Karl Stecher.

Best People Read Hob.

New Jersey—May I say, at this time, that I thank HOBBIES from the bottom of my heart for giving me the opportunity to contact very fine types of persons, both dealers and people in private life. In my correspondence I have had the pleasure of meeting a bank president; a woman in the Office of United States Interior Dept. of Indian Affairs; an ardent collector in the City Hall in the State of Idaho; a woman who has several tea rooms in California; several doctors, as well as many dealers with whom it has been a pleasure to transact business. Thank you, HOBBIES Magazine, for making this possible.—Alice Sand.

Must Have

Oregon—HOBBIES is a must in our home and greatly appreciated and enjoyed.—Frances Fletcher.

Stops the Work

Indiana—This is just a note to tell you how much I enjoy your magazine. All my housework waits when HOBBIES arrives. It is so much fun searching through its many pages for my particular pattern in milk glass.—Mrs. Leigh Stair.

And for Less Money

Massachusetts—I am very much pleased with my ads in HOBBIES. I advertise in another, but your magazine pays the best. I always try to boost HOBBIES.—Ethel Doane.

Another Dark Horse

Louisiana—May I say that I read with great interest your editorials and think Mr. Lightner ought to be president, or at least, U. S. Senator from Illinois. We need more people as courageous as he is at this time.—Paul F. Veith.

The Short Grass Country

Texas—Please find enclosed my check for another year's subscription to your grand magazine. I positively couldn't make it out in this short grass country without it. Keep it coming to your many subscribers and for the next generation.—Mrs. L. M. Davenport.

Ads Add to Collection

Virginia—I enjoy HOBBIES and have purchased some very nice pitchers for my collection through the ads. We look forward to its arrival with much pleasure.—Mrs. A. J. Ketsules.

The Indispensable

Minnesota—Have had excellent results from my advertising. Don't know what we would do without HOBBIES.—Jean Colvin.

Wedgwood Hobby

Iowa—HOBBIES is without doubt, the finest magazine for hobbyists, regardless of what they collect. I have secured a number of very fine Wedgwood pieces from dealers using your columns. Your editorials are timely and hit the nail on the head every time.—E. A. Sisler.

Brings 'Em to the Shop

Illinois—Enclosed find check for another year of HOBBIES. I am buying myself a Christmas present. HOBBIES has been coming to my home for many years. I would not want my subscription to lapse and refuse my old friend entrance to my shop and deny myself many hours of enjoyment and benefit.—Frances Webb.

Plenty of Grief

Illinois—I surely want my HOBBIES for another year. It is one of my great joys to have it. Hope we can have it for a long time. The last show was fine, and again—I hope we can have many more. Thank you again for the great amount of work you do in publishing the magazine and show work. Please say "thanks" to all your staff for me. It surely must be hard in these times.—Claudia Willmott.

Miniature Bottles

By RALPH G. TILTON

Sparkling wines, whiskies, and cordials in innumerable shapes and colors are to be seen in the collection of miniature containers which has been assembled over the last 25 years by H. A. Gralnick, shoe merchant, Los Angeles.

More than 400 brands, representing virtually every American make, and some French and Mexican varieties, have been put on display in two cabinets, in the living room of Mr. Gralnick's home.

Here may be seen the stern visage of "Old Overholt" side by side with the landscape trademark of Southern Comfort, while Haig and Haig provides the background.

Such names as Paul Jones, Black Label, Blue Label, Old Mr. Boston, Johnny Walker, and scores of others familiar to American tastes, are shown in colorful array.

All the bottles are from three to four inches in height, and many brands are represented by both square and flat bottles. Abbotts Aromatic Bitters, Old Bushmills, and Duff Gordon brands stand shoulder to shoulder with Don Q's Puerto Rican rum.

Although he never takes a drink Mr. Gralnick has been collecting these miniatures since before prohibition days, and has many stories to tell of the unusual places and circumstances under which he obtained them. As a traveling man, he has visited many corners of the United States, and always manages to pick up a new specimen at every stop.

Miniature Movie Town

Hollywood—Lionel Banks, art director, built so perfect a miniature town to be used as a model for Robert Riskin's RKO Radio release, "Magic Town," starring Jimmy Stewart and Loretta Young, that three different toy manufacturers competed for rights to reproduce it for the Christmas trade. The town is complete with street cars that run and street lights that work.

Miniatures at the Chicago Show

It becomes more and more apparent that the hobby of miniature collecting is taking a greater hold on the American public than ever before. There was a constant crowd around the booth of Alice Schiavon at the Chicago Antiques Exposition and Hobby Fair, for it was here that miniaturia was featured in its many aspects. Old and young alike were entranced with the Chippendale tables, the Windsor and other chairs, the ironing boards, the dust-pans, irons, dishes, towels and many other articles of utility and decorative value.

One booth showed a group of 25 or 30 miniature cups and saucers as might be used in an exquisite doll house, each one produced by master designers. This collection was housed in a miniature cabinet, suitable in proportion for display.

A case of miniature seashell dolls in another booth were works of art and their colors were as bright and radiant as colors of the rainbow.

Exquisite miniatures of silver were shown in other booths, and tiny pearl spoons found in a group of pearl salts would have delighted any miniature collector.

Among the animated miniatures there was a musical bird, hardly as big as a grasshopper, which gave forth as delicate a tone as a Stradivarius.

Aside from the miniature collector, the furnisher of doll rooms certainly must have found this show a happy hunting ground.

In Winter Plan For Spring

"In winter," writes one of our readers, "prepare for Spring." He wishes to point out, he says, that miniature gardens and tiny parks can be designed in the winter for full fruition in the spring. If there is a vacant lot in your vicinity, he suggests, that a little community co-operation can develop it into a setting for an appropriate park or garden in miniature. Or if one wishes to, he usually can get sufficient co-operation from civic minded persons, for development of a miniature village.

Viola Allen Exhibition

To many of the old-time play-goers the name of Viola Allen will bring back pleasant memories. Miss Allen, who got her first big chance on the stage in the early Eighties never played other than a leading role it is said. Miss Allen recently enacted a stellar part in a special exhibition which opened recently at the Museum of the City of New York. She was present in person when the museum opened its exhibition entitled "Viola Allen—American Actress," a collection of costumes, posters, pictures and programmes which she gave to the museum.

It was after "Esmeralda" a play by Frances Hodgson Burnett, had run at the Madison Square Theatre for 300 performances in the early eighties, and Miss Annie Russell wearied of the title role, that Miss Allen got her chance. A school girl and absolute novice, Viola Allen stepped into the main role and enacted it throughout the country, thus initiating a career which continued until 1916 when she retired.

Viola Allen's favorite roles have been those of Shakespeare's heroines—of which she has played fifteen. On view in the exhibition are the costumes she wore as Rosalind, Portia, Viola, Desdemona, Imogen and Hermione, the last being a be-jewelled cloak originally worn by Ellen Terry as Guinevere in "King Arthur." Lady Teazle's voluminous frock which Miss Allen wore when she played in "The School For Scandal" with her father, C. Leslie Allen as Sir Peter in 1909 can also be seen as well as the pearl embroidered wedding dress of her Julia in Sheridan Knowles' drama "The Hunchback" (season of 1902.)

On Dress at the Theatre

Demorest's Monthly Magazine for January 1873.

It strikes me with a disagreeable degree of force that a singular amount of bad taste is, at the present time, evinced by the fair New Yorkers when displaying themselves at our various theatres. And I do not confine my criticism, though free, to Shoddydom—graphic and useful word!—I say like the attorney in The Rivals, "without hesitation, and I say it boldly," that our belles present at the theatre, as "lookers on in Vienna," have forgotten to draw the ever desirable "line," and approach too nearly the lovely and admired tragédiennes or comédiennes on the boards who must, in conformity to the exigencies of their profession, dress according to certain, to them, often unpleasant rules.

Théophile Benviton, the naughty boy in the Fast Family says, that the young girls of society look like the demi-monde but moins le chic; in other words, without that indescribable touch of witchery or fascination, that something, that, to the Théophile Benvitons of this wicked world, makes up the attraction of that portion of it.

Yet our young girls do not really wish to resemble coquettes. Their innate modesty expresses itself in their sweet faces, and let them try as they may to imitate Tostée in her arch looks, and Lotta in her laugh, they fall far wide of the mark, because they are, altogether too pure and good, though sometimes tant soit peu silly to reach it.

Let no Sophonisba Adelaide of the Avenue, suppose that the gold fringe and embroidery on her sacque is the thing. Lay not that flattering unction to thy soul, Sophonisba mia! the black embroidery mingled with jet; the softly shaded and wondrous work in brown floss of many tints; the delicate garnet or mazarine blue, or the ever-stylish white work, those were the thing. But silver embroidery, gold embroidery, and gold flowers in the hat at the theatre! Avault! my soul abhors it! and it is not your style. Nature made you an American, and an aristocrat of her own school. Your delicate aquiline ought to turn up, if aquilines could do that at the cliquant, a crushing French word, fairest and sweetest, invented to wither by the scorn of the Eaubourg Saint-Germain, the ladies of the Imperial Court and their attire. "Ché! as Drogan sang, they have had their day!

Did I see Mrs. Millionbonds at the Fifth Avenue Theatre, with a bird of Paradise in her hair, or bonnet, or was it the work of an illusion? To use a novel expression; Did my eyes deceive me? No. Weep! Muse of the Beautiful, it was the exquisite Millionbonds, and she had a bird of Paradise in her hat! And if she turned to look over her shoulder at the mirror behind her,—that very convenient mirror,—and then glanced on the stage by way of looking "on this picture and on that," she must have been struck with the immense resemblance to the actress at that moment speaking; I mean the one who spoke so often that evening, that she must necessarily have lighted upon her.

Now why invade that dominion? Why take to the gold fringes and birds of Paradise of the theatrical domain, where Fashion,—gentle goddess!—furnishes a profusion of delicate feathers, and any quantity of really beautiful embroidery? It is not the thing, Mrs. Millionbonds, and it won't "go down," or if it does, it ought not; it should stick in our throats.

Angelica Malvina Four-in-hand was there. I know that as well as you do. Angelica is not visited by the right sort of people. The brothers, cousins, nephews, etc., may look in upon her, but the sisters and mothers and aunts do not. Look at Angelica. Contemplate her hair, her dress, her "altogether," and tell me whether you, sweetest of Millionbonds, do not owe it to your position not to put those diamonds over your forehead, and those double bracelets over the sleeve at the elbow above it,—and at the wrist? I know you will not go so so far as that; I know that you will not gallop after the beautiful Angelica Malvina Four-in-hand so fast as that, but when I contemplate the bird of Paradise already installed upon the glory of your blonde locks, and when I recall Sophonisba Adelaide of the Avenue with her gold fringe, and see your opera-glass turned so often in the direction of the Four-in-hand when you think no one is looking, which someone always is—three! I admit I tremble!

Oh! for the serene propriety of the delicate ermine tippet on the dusty velvet basque without an ornament beside, and the stylish but unobtrusive black velvet hat that was, certainly, with a light glove and a small

Gems and Minerals

MINERALOGICAL THOUGHTS

By W. SCOTT LEWIS

Gold

Gold is the most malleable of all metals. An ounce can be made into gold leaf so thin that 2,500,000 leaves only make an inch in thickness, or it can be drawn into a wire over 50 miles long.

The specific gravity of gold is usually about 19.32. It melts at 1063° C. and boils at 2500° C. The color varies from golden-yellow to silver-white or orange-red according to the impurities that are present, but changes to greenish when the metal is in the molten condition. White gold contains platinum, silver, nickel, or zinc. Red gold contains copper. The presence of iron gives a bluish color. Black gold is maldonite, a compound with bismuth.

The atomic number is 79 and the atomic weight is 197.20, showing that it is a mixture of isotopes.

The gold coins that are still remembered by many contained nine parts of gold to one part of copper. The purity of jewelry gold is indicated in carats, 24 carats being pure, 18 carats being 18/24 pure, etc.

Native gold is the first mineral in the Dana System, being given the number 1111.

Believe it or not, gold is one of the most widely distributed of all minerals, being found in all igneous rocks as well as in sea water. However this is nothing to get excited about as the average concentration is only 6 parts in 100,000,000.

Gold alloys with many different metals but enters into very few chemical combinations, the commonest being with tellurium to form telluride ores. The sulfide ores are not chemical combinations with gold.

They say "gold is where you find it," but it is much more apt to be found associated with quartz and pyrite. It resists chemical action and is very heavy, so tends to remain behind when deposits are eroded away. Most of the world's supply of gold was obtained from the resulting placers until recent times.

Gold mines and placers are widely distributed over every continent, and in the year 1940 the total production for the United States was 4,889,404 ounces. On the first of June, 1941, the total gold reserves of the United States were $22,574,948,258, while for the entire world they amounted to $30,522,000,000.

During recent years it has been increasingly difficult to obtain gold specimens for collectors. Miners are are no longer allowed to carry out specimens to sell on the side and mining companies will not bother to save anything for collection purposes. As a result it is no longer possible to supply the demand for this interesting mineral.

However, we have obtained a limited quantity of small nuggets and grains of gold from South America. It was purchased from Indians by a mining engineer and is perfectly legal material while most of the gold specimens in collector's hands were originally "high-graded."

Don't Let Color Fool You

There is a tendency for beginners to give undue weight to color when trying to name unknown minerals. Of course color is often a great help, but the fact that azurite is blue doesn't mean that all blue minerals are azurite. In fact the more experience one has had the less apt he is to give a quick answer when asked to name something a little out of the ordinary. We once had some crystalline specimens regarding which we had some doubt so we asked the opinion of numerous people. Many named them without hesitation although the names didn't all agree. Finally we showed a piece to one of the greatest living mineralogists and asked him what it was. He looked at it carefully and handed it back saying: "I don't know. What do you think it is?" We have noticed the same thing in every field of science. The more people know the less apt they are to try to impress others with their superior wisdom.

When we see a green copper mineral it is easy to say it is malachite and let it go at that. Usually that is the correct answer and the person who always gives it will probably be right more times than he is wrong.

However there are a number of green copper ores that are not malachite and unless one is familiar with them he may make some serious errors and pass up a chance to obtain a stock of valuable material.

Cinnabar in Opalite

There seems to be a lot of confusion regarding the gem known as "myrickite," and this has not been helped any by the claims of certain small dealers who probably never saw a specimen of true myrickite. Genuine material, which does not seem to be found anymore, consists of cinnabar in clear chalcedony. It is very beautiful and holds its color when polished. The material which we have seen called myrickite recently was cinnabar in opalite. It is softer than the genuine article and fades if left in a strong light.

Adventurine

They find a green quartz down in Brazil that is commonly called adventurine because it contains more or less mica. However this is not evenly dis-

Mineral Hobby Pulls Retired Man Out

A columnist, writing about people who retire to California has this to say:

"One man, formerly head of one of the country's largest corporations, explained to me that retirement had its own peculiar problems.

"I was well known back East," he said. I was active in all sorts of ways; and my name was often in the newspapers. When I was introduced to people, they never asked what line of business I was in.

"Well, when I came out here, it was quite a jolt to find nobody knew who I was—or gave a damn. It took a little time getting used to the fact that they were right, I was just an old has-been who had to make his way in the world a second time.

"Old people seldom realize that they can't keep on living in the past. They take it for granted that everybody's interested in what they've done. But people don't care what you've been. They care only about what you are.

"Another difficulty is that in this country we never prepare for being put on the shelf. We don't develop any interests outside our own narrow field. And so, when we find ourselves benched, we're unhappy and bewildered and oh, so bored.

"I thought I'd go crazy my first months out here. The telephone never rang, I had no callers or engagements, and my mail grew thinner and thinner. Then, when I was just about to jump off Cypress Point and be eaten by the sea lions, a friend got me to collecting rock specimens. It may sound silly, but now I'm as busy as I ever was in my life, and I hardly have time enough to keep up my correspondence with mineralogists all over the world. And I work harder, collecting specimens, than I ever did chasing customers."

This man, incidentally used to live in a huge house, served by a retinue of retainers. Now, he and his wife live alone in a two room cottage—and appear to like it.

opera-glass, the real thing to appear in! Where have these fled? Why that scarlet cloak? Let it go to the opera; that is the place for it and those staring white plumes, and "stunning" flowers? Take them, I implore thee, take them out of my sight!

Don't let it be said of you, Mrs. Millionbonds, having such a lot of money, that you don't know how to spend it. Let not those gentlemen of a certain foreign legation, not the Russian, but another, smile in contemplating your attire. A French wit said of Marie Antoinette, that she belonged rather to "her sex than her rank." Don't let any one say that of you.

KYLE Coat-of-Arms

By Mabel Louise Keech

Kyle

If you remember the Coat-of-Arms that appeared in the December issue of 1945, you will agree with me that there could not have been found a more perfect picture for Christmas than the Wiswell. It was a Swiss family—from the peaceful nation—the shield held a background of fir trees—Christmas trees—a deer running in front; the crest was—a star! We had the cut made from a negative photostat so the shield was black; and the star was white, while the trees and deer stood out as though lighted by the rays of the star.

This year we think we found a good one, but not so perfect. Some of you question: "How could you find a Coat-of-Arms with a star and candlesticks or a star with deer and fir trees? Last year, I went through the photostatic record I have of all the Coats-of-Arms made for clients, looking for a star in a crest—and among them, discovered the Wiswell (Wiswald.) This year I used another method which is perhaps unknown to many readers of this column.

You no doubt have a cross reference index if you have a large number of records to keep. For example, an index of people who have written on certain subjects, with the subject opposite the name. Then you have a cross reference file of subjects, with the names of all the people in the other index who have written on that subject. Then you can follow this. Burke, Berry, Robson, and others have written practically complete records of British Coats-of-Arms, arranged by the people's names, alphabetically. Another author, whose work is in a very few of our largest libraries, has written a book with the names of all the symbols used in British Heraldry, listed in alphabetical order, with the names of the people having those symbols, or certain combinations of those symbols, after the name of the symbol.

So, looking for "mullet," and seeing many other symbols such as chevrons, crescents, crosses, combined with one or more mullet, we were surprised and overjoyed to be stumped in our search by "candlesticks" one of the most popular and significant of Christmas symbols. It was the Coat-of-Arms of the Kyle family. This book does not record crests, so we turned to another to determine the crest. It was an anchor. Not an outstanding Christmas symbol, but certainly one that has appealed to the hearts of Christians over the centuries, and therefore is very fitting as a crest to this Armorial Bearing.

Not being familiar with the name, we wondered if there were sufficient in print to make the story interesting to so many readers. The search did not give too much, but we hope this article will be enjoyed for the reason that it is written—to bring the Christmas message through the family history medium.

He beareth for Arms: Argent two candlesticks in chief sable and a mullet in base gules. Crest An anchor and cable proper. Translated: A silver (argent) shield, with two black (sable) candlesticks in the upper part (chief), and a red star (mullet for star, gules for red) in the lower part (base). The crest is an anchor and cable of natural color, or "proper."

This is the second Coat recorded in Burke's General Armory for Kyle in Scotland. The first one, which is the basic one, has a gold shield with three black candlesticks, no star. Another is the same as the latter with a silver border added, a deer's head for crest, and a motto: "Providentia me committo." Still another is ascribed "to Right Rev. Samuel Kyle D.D., Bishop of Cork, whose family were long seated in Kyle, N.B., and whose immediate ancestors settled at Camnash, co. Down." This shield was divided vertically into black and gold sections, with 3 candlesticks, colors alternating with the shield colors. The crest, a lion rampant holding a cross. Motto: Tibi soli.

To return to the description of the one featured here, and its interpretation. The silver in the shield signifies sincerity and peace; red, courage and magnanimity. The black (sable) of the candlestick probably has no specific meaning, as often candlesticks were black, but on more important symbols, sable stood for constancy and nobility, being the fur lining of royal robes.

As was mentioned before, the anchor had a religious significance, and a writer of over a century ago says that it typifies succour in extremity, and is the Christian emblem of hope. Richard I once bore a device with an anchor, and the motto, "Christus Duce"—Christ the leader.

The star denotes a man above the ruder sort of man, one whose influence shines afar, as the beams of the star. It indicates Crusader ancestry.

"Canting," or as we would say "punning," is a very popular and interesting custom of Heraldry. The symbols "sing forth" or "cant" the name of the person bearing the Arms. Example are stickles on Van Sickle's shield; a lion on Lyon's; sheaf of wheat of Field's; hunting horn on Hunter, gate or "portcullis" on Porter who guarded the gate, etc.

The most interesting part of this search was the discovery of an allusion to the Coat-of-Arms in "Scottish Arms 1370-1678" by R. R. Stoddart. It was in the Workman's manuscript section—that is: notes by James Workman about 1565. This paragraph reads: "Kyle of that ilk, L., the charges are candlesticks or kyles."!!! So these candlesticks are canting the name of Kyles—and how many of us knew the "kyle" was a candlestick in the olden days in Scotland? "Of that ilk," means the town of that name—the town of Kyle. "L." probably refers to the record by "Lyon King of Arms" in Edinburgh College of Arms.

An Adam Kyle is registered as a burgess of Edinburgh in "Scots Peerage, the History of Noble Families of Scotland."

1943. Their son Fleance married Nesta, daughter of Griffith ap Llewellyn, Prince of North Wales; and their son Walter was "Baron of Kyle, Strathgrief, and the Isle of Bute, 1st Hereditary Lord High Steward of Scotland, dying 1093.

In this country, John Prescott, progenitor of the Prescotts in Mass. had a daughter who married a man from Scotland named Forbes Kyle, and they had four sons who had children, so that the name was carried on through them. The Kyles in N. H. might have been of this family. One Ephraim was in the Revolutionary War, and reported the loss of one gun and one bayonet valued at L2. 2s. In Lexington, Mass., two sisters born in New Brunswick, Canada, married Lexington boys, Riley and Simonds.

Other families lived in Pennsylvania. James lived near Lyconning Creek, in 1793, and Joseph Kyle was in the Penn. Militia in the Revolution, born in Lancaster, Pa., and dying in Xenia, Ohio.

The Virginia Historical Magazine mentions many families of the name Kyle, some of these moving into the southwest. Woburn, Mass., Kyles married into the Cabell family in Virginia.

In an old graveyard in Cadiz, Harrison Co. Ohio, the wife Jane, and daughter Kate, of Thomas Kyle, were buried in 1866 and 1884. Also, in Jackson Co., Ohio, lived a Christopher Kyle, said to have been born in Germany, came to N. J., and continued westward.

Madison Co., Ill. history in Marine township, tells that Adam Kyle was an early settler, and built one of the first brick houses in that part of the country.

"Who's Who" has listed several Kyles within the last decade—notably Edwin Dewees Kyle, a R.R. official of N. C.; Melvin Grove Kyle, clergyman Egyptologist, author, of Cadiz, O., and Pittsburgh; and Edward Jackson Kyle, born in Kyle, Texas. He was educated in agricultural studies in Texas, and was a member of various boards sending him as delegate to South America. He was appointed as ambassador to Guatemala in February, 1945, and is author of important books on pecan growing, and interrelated subjects.

The name "KYLE" will remind us of Christmas after this—the star of hope—the anchor of hope—the candlesticks, symbol of home life. (We hope the first Kyle candlesticks did have burning candles on them in the shield—the description did not say so!) May we take this opportunity of wishing all the Kyle readers a very happy Christmas season!

In a few weeks you will be opening your Christmas gifts. I hope Santa, if he knows your desires, will have been to a good stationery store and selected a beautiful leather, zipper, three-ringed, note-book, (with pockets), that you may keep your family history notes and charts and pictures in good condition. In this they will be free from dust, will not have corners turned on the leaves, and will be held in their correct place between the rings. Here you may keep mounted clippings, photostats, kodak pictures, copies of wills and deeds, besides the stories you have collected. Index pages with celluloid guides on the

CARDS OF NAGASAKI

By FLORA C. Mc KIERNAN

Among some 400 Japanese post cards in my collection, most of which are very old ones, are many of Nagasaki, and considering the total destruction of this once beautiful city many collectors will be interested in these cards.

On October 3, 1910, cards were issued by the American Tourist Party Welcome Committee in several cities, Tokyo, Kobe, Nagasaki, and others. A welcoming design was stamped on the back of each card, this design composed of the American and Japanese flags with crossed staffs, tied together with cord and tassel, a five-point star placed at the top. The flags formed a circle in the center of which was the welcoming inscription in both English and Japanese language together with the date.

Several beautifully embossed cards are among these of Nagasaki, some representing the navy with views of the harbour, Suwa shrine, etc. These views are framed in an anchor in gold with a five-point silver star at the top and all surrounded by a silver chain.

Two notable cards in this group are worthy of special mention.

One of these has a very fine picture of Gen. U. S. Grant in a silver frame, the American flag draped above it.

A gold, embossed American Eagle adorns this card together with embossed roses and a plaque in a narrow silver frame bearing this inscription in Gen. Grant's own handwriting:

"Nagasaki, Japan,

June 22nd, 1879.

"At the request of Gov. Utsumi Tadakala Mrs. Grant and I each planted a tree in the Nagasaki Park. I hope that both trees may prosper, grow large, live long, and in this growth prosperity and long life be emblematic of the future of Japan."

U. S. Grant."

This plaque also carries the notation:

"Autograph of Gen. U. S. Grant, still preserved in the City-Hall, Nagasaki, Japan."

The picture of Grant carries the same notation with the word "portrait" instead of "Autograph."

The second card shows the stone monument in the Park with the same inscription carved upon it in both English and Japanese, with this notation:

"Stone monument in Nagasaki Park with engraving of Gen. U. S. Grant's autograph."

This card also shows a view of the park and the Banyan tree planted by Gen. Grant. It is also adorned with embossed flowers. Incidental to these cards of Gen. Grant, a card in my collection of Chinese cards pictures the Grant Triumphal Arch, erected to welcome Gen. Grant when, as the American President, he visited Hong Kong in 1874. Other cards of Nagasaki are of general views in beautiful colors, many of them hand-colored, as so many of the cards of Japan are. Also two cards of Nagasaki are of paper-thin wood, laid on paper. These picture the Suwa Shrine with its great flight of steps leading to the Shrine, and a general view of a city street. It is interesting to note in connection with this tree planting by Gen. Grant, that a number of trees in this country have been planted by him, of these being a magnificent elm tree in Washington Park, Chicago, planted by Grant December, 6, 1879.

The view I have of this shows the American flag flying high on its standard beside the tree and a large stone monument at the foot of it.

This card is of extra fine quality paper and was issued about forty years ago by V. O. Hammon Publishing Co., Chicago.

Post Cards of the Telephone

All of the hobbies of C. A. Swoyer of Columbus, Ohio, relate to the telephone in some way.

Mr. Swoyer's latest hobby is a collection of post cards that either picture the telephone or refer to it in some way. He started his collection about five years ago and today has more than 200 individual cards that were recently on display in the Columbus Public Library. The idea of collecting these cards was originated when he was collecting song titles that referred to the telephone.

When assembled according to the dates they were printed, Mr. Swoyer's collection of cards tell of the chronological development of telephone service from the day of the old awkward upright instruments to the present compact cradle type. The oldest card in the collection is 51 years old and advertises the advantages of a "short distance" telephone. This type of telephone was used between rooms of a large house or building as an intercommunication system.

Another old card, dated 1906, was used by a newspaper, the Columbus Citizen, to stress the advantages of using the telephone to get want ads to the paper quickly. It pointed out the time saving values of the instrument as compared with a trip to downtown Columbus to the Citizen office.

The organization which he has set up for following his hobby is unique in itself. Post card dealers all over the world have been asked to send him cards and his collection shows the effectiveness of his system. He has also asked friends in the telephone business, both in Ohio and elsewhere in the country, to watch for cards and send them to him.

Mr. Swoyer is well qualified to follow his hobby of collecting historical material relating to the telephone business. He is chairman of the historical committee of the Telephone Pioneers of America, an organization composed of telephone workers with 21 or more years' service in the business.

Old Water Scenes

By BESSIE M. KELLEY

OLD WATER scenes made up my first card love, because of their beauty. Infinite is the charm of lakes, nestling like jewels in the wooded hills; of streams that lie in trout-filled pools or rush down mountain cataracts. Inspiring is the majesty of the ocean, in crashing surf or harbors' lovely calm. Interesting and instructive are the busy commercial waterfronts, one of the lifelines of this country's trade.

Somehow none of the later printers have caught the green beauty of water as did the Detroit publishing company. Any water scene of theirs is lovely and real. Even the old German printing was superior to the garish colors of today.

Nowadays one can get cards only of famous places, while the scenes that caught the old-time photographers' interests also stimulate mine—a brook babbling through the woods; a waterfall behind a car-barn; a Jersey cow standing knee-deep in a shady stream; the square of mill-pond; the old well—all touch the imagination and the magic spring of memory.

In collecting water scenes one inevitably collects bridges and boats. I have every type of bridge from hand-made stone and rustic willow, through ugly but interesting "jack-knives" popping up across busy water lanes, to the cobweb beauty of gigantic steel spans. New England's nearly-extinct wooden covered bridges, set in rural beauty over crystal rivers, are a field in themselves.

Boats are also fascinating—the frigate "Constitution"; the barque "Kathleen"; island steamers, ocean liners, bulky city ferries, county ferries, mere rafts, hand-hauled by ropes—canoes stuffed into park lakes, side wheelers, stern wheelers, white winged fleets coming in against the sunset sky. All have a romance that will never die.

Wonderful Hatpins Of the Season

December, 1910.

The Five & Ten Cent Magazine,

This is the greatest season for big hatpins in the history of the trade. Hatpins large enough to hold powder puffs, mirrors, trinkets and small change are being shown by the manufacturing jewelers.

So huge are the new designs that many of the ornamental heads have hinged lids. When the lid is lifted the powder puff and receptacle for knickknacks is disclosed. The inside surface of the lid is a tiny mirror.

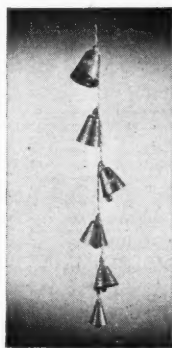

Guards are made to cover the dangerous point of the hatpin. They are ornamental, matching the head of the pin. Some of the guards are made even larger and elaborately ornamented than the heads. The same guards may be used interchangeably for many pins.

Both heads and guards are represented as roosters, owls, or other bird heads made in gold, silver, and gems or rhinestone and imitations. In some designs the roosters from comb to claws is 3 inches long.

The pins are made in all sizes and lengths, and the prices range accordingly. The head of the pin is almost three times as large as the ordinary one, and opens upward. Inside is a powder rag, rough puff, a tiny box of powder, and a small circular mirror. The heads are highly ornamental according to price, with the heads of roosters, pheasants, owls and other birds. These are made in gold, silver, bronze—some decorated with gems, or rhinestones and imitations.

If you are riding in a car in New York or vicinity and you observe a vision in blue or pink draw forth her twelve inch hat pin and deftly unfasten the end, don't be afraid that she is going to see how close she can come to gouging out your eye or tear away a large section of your face. Watch her closely, and from the head of that pin you will see her draw forth a rouge rag or possibly a powder puff and a small circular mirror. A few strokes on the cheeks, several peeks in the small circular glass will then follow, and then the pin will be returned to the hat.

The new "fad" has caught on in New York with a vengeance, Department stores and other shops are doing a land office business.

BELLS

Bell Legend

A unique bell legend that comes out of Britain concerns a church which possesses both a bell tower and a steeple. The story states that two spinster sisters who decided to install a peal of bells as a memorial to themselves built the oddity because they could not agree whether the peals should come from a tower or steeple. Each followed her inclination; hence both.

The Mistletoe Bough

Yew trees may be venerable and holy may be cheerful, while both plants have considerable botanical interest, apart altogether from questions of folk-lore; but in all these respects both are undoubtedly surpassed by the mistletoe.

The only European species of a genus belonging to a somewhat isolated Natural Order, it is almost unique among the plants of the Continent as an evergreen stem-parasite. Its stems and leaves are of a peculiar vivid yellow shade of green, that makes them contrast markedly, not only with bare winter boughs or evergreens, but with the foliage also of the summer months. . . .

The pearly berries are eaten by many birds, especially the mistle-thrush, and when they rub their sticky beaks on the bark of trees the seed may get rubbed into a crack, and there germinate. The late Mr. Edwin Lees, who paid much attention to the plant, says that fieldfares and redwings are especially fond of mistletoe berries, "and as these generally fly in flocks, keeping in one line of direction, it is not unusual to see a corresponding line of mistletoe bushes ranging across the country for a long distance. I have followed," he continues, "such a line till its continuity was broken by a river, when I have almost invariably found that its course was again continued from the nearest tree that presented itself on the opposite side of the water." It is remarkable that mistletoe most commonly grows downwards, the seed in sprouting sending its tap-root upwards, or in whatever direction leads towards the centre of the branch of the host-plant. If care be taken not to crush the seed, and to place it where it can sprout in this way without being washed away by rain, it is not difficult to propagate it artificially on apple trees. It occurs on a great variety of trees, but especially on the apple, poplar, lime, and hawthorn, and though it may be purely fancy, I have been impressed by a difference in the mode of growth of the parasite according as it grows on the much branched hawthorn, or on the straight-limbed lime, as if it assimilated itself to its host.

Mistletoe has been found parasitic upon firs and cedar, and even, strange to say, upon itself; but is very rare upon the oak, only about a score of mistletoe oaks being known in the kingdom. Of these the greater number are in Herefordshire; but there is one at Windsor.

The roots of the young mistletoe penetrate into the sapwood of the host-plant, and practically form a woody graft with it; but, interesting as the plant thus is from the points of view of structure and physiology, it is even more so from that of mythology and folk-lore. There is no apparent connection between the veneration of the plant by the Druids in Britain and its position in Scandinavian mythology. Speaking of the former, Pliny says, "The oak is the sacred tree, and whatever is found growing upon it they regard as sent from heaven and as the mark of a tree chosen by God. Such cases of parasitism are rare, and when they occur attract much attention. . . ." It has been suggested that the May-Day costume of Jack-in-the-Green was that in which the Druids sought out the mistletoe-oak, and that when they had found it they danced round it, to the tune of "Hey derry down, down down derry," which, being interpreted, signifies, "In a circle move we round the oak." In confirmation of these statements it may be mentioned that Ovid speaks of the Druids singing to the mistletoe and that some oak woods in the west of England are still called "the Derry."—J. A. OWEN and G. S. BOULGER, in "THE COUNTRY MONTH BY MONTH." (London: Duckworth.)

A Chinese Rejection Slip

"Illustrious Brother of the Sun and Moon:

"Behold thy servant prostrate before thy feet! I kowtow to thee and beg that of thy graciousness thou mayest grant that I may speak and live. Thine honored manuscript has designed to cast the light of its august countenance upon me. With raptures I have perused it. By the bone of mine ancestors! Never have I encountered such wit, such pathos, such lofty thought. With fear and trembling I return the writing. Were I to publish the treasure thou hast sent me, the Emperor would order that it be made a standard of excellence and that none be published except such that equaled it. Knowing literature as I do, and that it would be impossible in ten thousand years to equal what thou hast done, I send thy writing back by guarded servants.

"Ten thousand times I crave thy pardon.

"Behold! My head is at thy feet and I am but dust.

"Thy servant's servant,
